HALF OF ESTATE OF J. P. WILLIAMS ASKED BY HEIRS

Fifty-One Relatives of Pioneer Georgia Turpentine Operator Appeal to Courts for Settlement.

AGREEMENT CLAIMED WITH MRS. WILLIAMS

Petitioners State That She Promised to Leave Relatives of Husband $3,000,000 in Her Will.

BY PAUL STEVENSON.

Disposition of one-half of an estate valued at $6,000,000 left by the late Jesse P. Williams, pioneer Georgia turpentine operator, to his wife, the late Mrs. Cora B. Williams, who died in Atlanta in March, 1923, is involved in a suit brought by 51 relatives of J. P. Williams filed in the Fulton superior court Saturday. The suit in behalf of George W. Williams and others and is directed against John Lord Nisbet, executor of the estate of Mrs. Cora B. Williams. The relatives are citizens of North Carolina and the proceedings were brought in their behalf by Bryan and Middlebrooks and N. T. Anderson, Jr., Atlanta lawyers; Judge John R. Wilson, of Bainbridge, Ga., and Col. H. L. Stevens, of the law firm of Stevens, Beasley and Stevens, Warsaw, N. C.

Filing of the suit in the Fulton superior court revealed a story of an alleged pre-death agreement under which Mrs. Cora B. Williams is said to have agreed to divide one-half of the huge estate with the relatives of her husband in her will provided the relatives left her in undisturbed possession of the properties during her lifetime. It is alleged that Mrs. Williams failed to make such provision in her will when she died last March but on the contrary devised the entire estate to her executor, John Lord Nisbet, to be converted by him into a trust fund for the establishment somewhere in Georgia of a memorial hospital to be known as the Jesse P. Williams hospital.

Inherits Large Fortune. Mrs. Williams inherited from her husband at his death in 1913 one of the largest fortunes ever accumulated in Georgia. The estate controls the Georgia, Florida and Alabama railroad which runs from Tallahassee, Florida, to Cuthbert, Ga. Mrs. Williams held the unique honor of being the president of this railroad, being the only woman railroad president in the country. Other properties included stock in banks in Savannah, Waycross, Bainbridge, Ga., and Perry, Fla.; bonds of the city of Atlanta, several Georgia counties, many issues

Governor Walker Commends Crusade To Outlaw Pistol

Editor Constitution: I cannot refrain from making an expression of my approval, not only personally, but as governor of the state, of the magnificent crusade of The Constitution for the elimination of the pistol from the pockets of the people of the state.

I wish that every other newspaper in and out of Georgia would join in this campaign so that their voices may reach not only the general assemblies of all the states, but of congress as well, inducing action that would forever wipe out this deadly menace which has taken more toll of human lives than the whole country lost during the great war.

If Georgia leads in this movement other states will follow and when the public sentiment of the country is aroused congress may be induced to take action to keep this nefarious traffic from crossing the borders of the states.

There is no possible excuse for the pistol. It should be made an outlaw in every state in the union. It is intended for but one thing, and that is to take human life, and the worst feature of it is that thousands of people are being killed every year by the easy access to this weapon, the users of which in most instances regret immediately afterwards the deadly impulse that causes men to arm themselves with a hidden weapon and to go out in search of human life.

Thousands of lives are being taken every year by the deadly pistol, and every one is a challenge to Christian civilization to put an end to this nefarious traffic.

I am glad that The Constitution has had the courage to lead this movement and I bid you God-speed in the fight you are making to free Georgia of a menace that has long blackened the good name of the state.

CLIFFORD WALKER,
Governor of Georgia.

Atlanta, Ga., January 9, 1925.

GOVERNOR LAUDS DRIVE TO ABOLISH PISTOL CARRYING

Chief Executive Praises Constitution Campaign Against Deadly Menace of Pistol to Georgia.

With the official and personal endorsement by Governor Clifford Walker Saturday, The Constitution's relentless warfare to outlaw the pistol in the state of Georgia gained added impetus. Already ministers, city and county officials, members of the general assembly and virtually every organization interested in law enforcement have allied themselves with The Constitution, branding the pistol as one of humanity's deadliest and most formidable enemies, and pledging support in the fight until the hip-pocket pistol is outlawed out of existence for good and all.

Georgia's chief executive warmly endorsed the campaign, declaring that there is no possible excuse for the pistol.

Blackens Good Name. "Thousands of lives are being taken every year by the deadly pistol," the governor said in his message to The Constitution, "and every one is a challenge to Christian civilization to put an end to this nefarious traffic."

"I am glad that The Constitution has had the courage to lead this movement and I bid you God-speed in the fight you are making to free Georgia of a menace that has long blackened the good name of the state."

Coincident with the governor's message came pledges of support and commendation from other quarters Saturday.

Rev. Charles M. Meeks, pastor of the Park Street Methodist church, informed The Constitution that the Men's Club of his pastorate had adopted resolutions endorsing the campaign, and volunteering the services of the organization in "outlawing this common enemy of human safety, happiness and life."

COURT DECISION IN KANSAS OUSTS KLAN FROM STATE

Contention That Ku Klux Is Operating for Profit Is Upheld by Supreme Court's Finding.

Topeka, Kan., January 10.—The Ku Klux Klan was outlawed by the supreme court of Kansas today. Putting an end to a battle that has been waged between Klan and state for more than two years, the supreme court handed down a decision sustaining the state's plea and ousting the Klan from Kansas.

The contention of Attorney General Charles B. Griffith that the Klan was operating for profit, and therefore would require authority from the state charter board, was upheld. Attorneys for the Klan had countered that the purpose of the order was benevolent and as such would not need a corporate charter.

The immediate effect of the decision will be to outlaw the Klan as an organization in Kansas. To obtain a charter, the sanction of the state charter board must be sought. This body is composed of the attorney general, secretary of state and state bank commissioner. The first two, elective officers, were both elected last November on anti-Klan platforms. The third member was appointed by the governor.

The suit was instituted November 21, 1922, at the direction of Governor Henry J. Allen.

Marshall Writes Decision. The opinion in the Klan ouster was written by Justice John Marshall, ruled that the Klan was doing business in Kansas illegally, under the corporate law. The opinion stated:

"1. A foreign corporation may be ousted from doing business in this state from the charter board to do so except where its business is protected by the interstate commerce clause of the constitution of the United States, or is exercised in behalf of the federal government."

"2. A corporation organized under the laws of another state, not for financial profit, which in this state performs all the functions it is authorized to do by its charter under the laws of the state of its organization and is doing business in this state within the meaning of the Kansas foreign corporation law."

COMMITTEE OF 19 ON SCHOOL MERGER NAMED BY PORTER

Mayors, Education Board Heads and Citizens From Affected Communities, Are Appointed on Body.

COMMITTEE EXPECTED TO MEET WEDNESDAY

Referendum in February Will Be Recommended, If Investigators Decide That Merger Is Feasible.

First definite steps toward working out a plan for the proposed consolidation of Atlanta, College Park, East Point and Fulton county school systems into one metropolitan district will be taken this week by a committee of nineteen representative citizens, appointed Saturday by Herbert Porter, chairman.

The following committee is composed of representatives of the respective school boards affected, the governments involved, and a number of private citizens:

Members of Committee. Mayor Walter A. Sims, Mayor W. W. Bateman, of College Park; Mayor C. H. Lively, of East Point; Mayor L. T. Carter, of Hapeville; Virgil S. Moore, chairman of the Fulton county commissioners; L. T. Nash, DeKalb county commissioner; John T. Hancock, president of the Atlanta board of education; E. D. Barrett, head of the College Park board; A. N. Tilly, president of the board of Fulton county; E. G. Nabell, president of the East Point board; Arthur Wrigley, president of the Fulton county board of education, and the following private citizens: Mrs. T. T. Stevens and Mrs. George Housman, of Atlanta; Mrs. R. T. Adger, of College Park; Mrs. F. A. Smith and Mrs. T. F. Guffin, of East Point; Mrs. W. W. Warren, of Bolton, and Robert C. Alston, of Buckhead.

The following were named as members of an advisory committee: Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of Atlanta schools; T. A. Clower, superintendent College Park schools; W. M. Rainer, superintendent DeKalb county schools; J. J. McGee, superintendent East Point system; Jere Wells, superintendent of Fulton county schools, and W. E. Dykes, principal of the Fulton County High school.

Plan Frequent Meetings. While no definite date has been set for the first meeting of the new committee, it is expected the opening session will be called for Wednesday, and from that time on the body probably will meet several times each week in order to investigate the merger thoroughly, and prepare recommendations.

HANCOCK SLATED FOR REELECTION

W. C. Slate and Dr. W. W. Eubanks Will Be Renamed by Education Board, It Is Predicted.

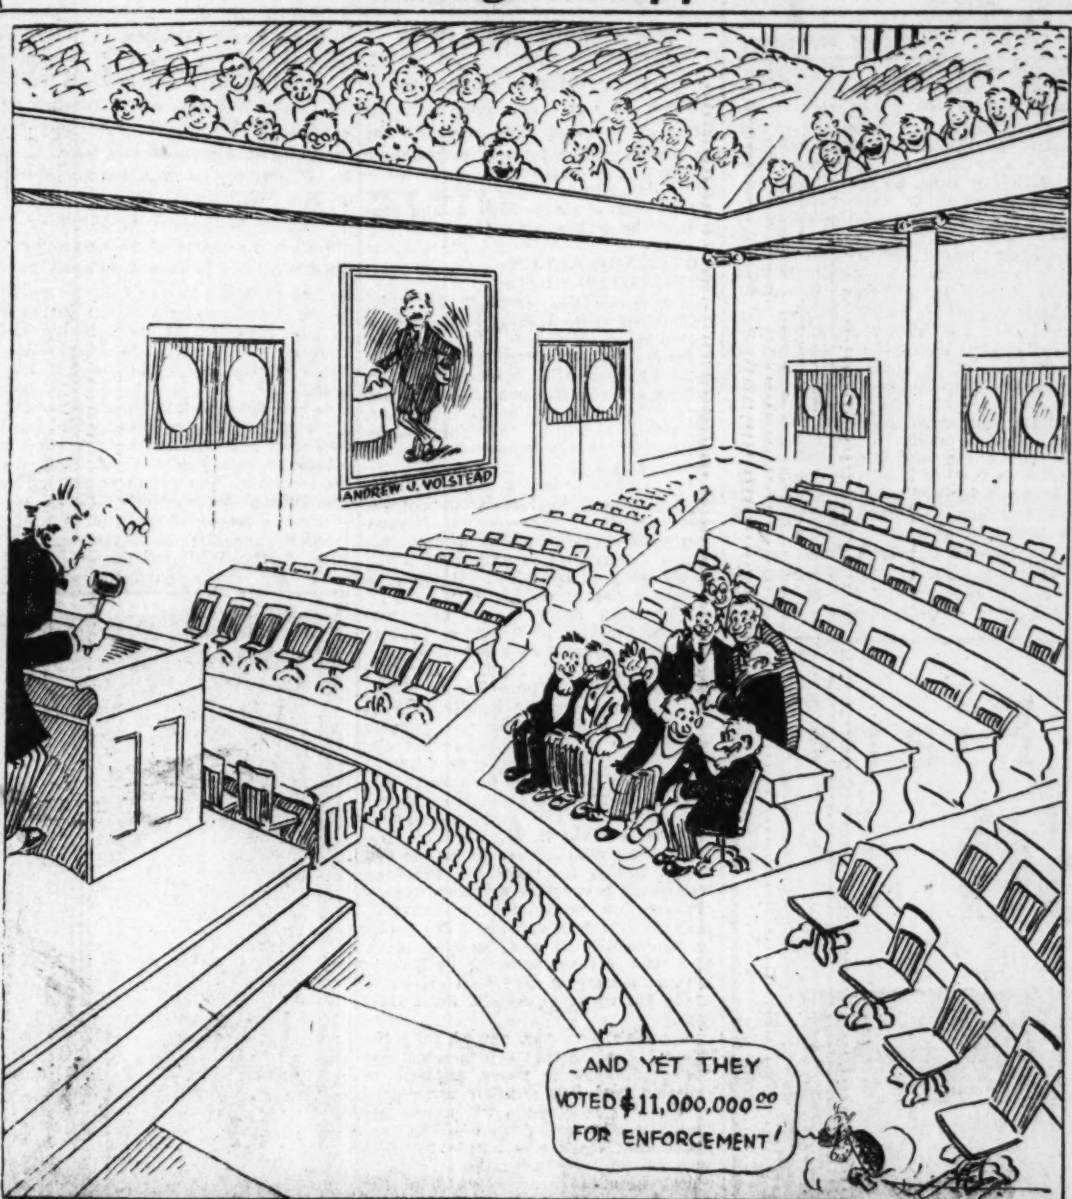

Reelection of John T. Hancock as president of the board of education at the annual election Tuesday was predicted Saturday and indications are that he will be named to succeed himself without opposition. In all probability, W. C. Slate and Dr. W. W. Eubanks will be reelected first and second vice presidents respectively.

W. W. Gaines, at present a member of the board, and president for several years, Saturday stated that he would not be a candidate for the presidency and reports that several other members of the body might enter the lists also have been denied.

With this slate elected, it is probable that a considerable number of changes will be made in committee heads. It is understood that officers will not be named as chairmen of important committees for 1925, which ruling automatically would bar Mr. Slate from one of his present positions.

Governor Walker Declines To Discuss Intentions

Governor Clifford Walker Saturday night declined to state what action he would take, following reports from Athens that subpoenas had been issued demanding his presence at the trial of certain cases in Athens this week. "I have not been served with any paper," he said, "and, of course, do not wish to make any statement of my intentions." Asked if he would go to Athens upon being served, the Governor said he did not care to discuss that in advance of court service. The governor said that in event he was summoned and did go to Athens he could add nothing to the statement he made to The Constitution Thursday regarding alleged Ku Klux Klan activities in Clarke county.

Athens, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—Three sensational developments were made public today in connection with indictments that were returned early in the week as a result of investigations made by a special Ku Klux Klan investigator, working here under direction of the order.

CHARLES WARREN TO SUCCEED STONE

Nomination of Michigan Man Sent to Senate To Be Attorney General of United States.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, January 10.—Charles Beecher Warren, Michigan lawyer and former ambassador to Japan and to Mexico, is to fill the cabinet vacancy caused by the elevation of Attorney General Stone to the supreme court bench.

His nomination was sent today to the senate, where prompt action is expected, despite the fact he was selected over Governor Grosbeck, of Michigan, who was recommended by Senator Coughens, republican, of that state, and the Michigan delegation in the house. The appointment was referred to the judiciary committee in the usual course.

Pending senate action on his nomination to succeed Associate Justice

Washington, January 10.—The expected withdrawal of Associate Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes from the supreme court in the near future is expected to give President Coolidge his opportunity to recompense Hughes for his long services to the party and the nation by restoring him to the supreme bench, from which he resigned in 1916 to run against Woodrow Wilson. Senator Medill McCormick, of Illinois, recently defeated for re-nomination, is considered as a likely appointee to the Court of St. James's in London. Solicitor General James M. Beck and Secretary of Commerce Hoover also are possibilities.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Washington, January 10.—Charles E. Hughes will retire from the cabinet on March 4, and Frank B. Kellogg, now ambassador to London, will succeed him as secretary of state.

Mr. Hughes has placed his resignation in the hands of President Coolidge with a reaffirmation of loyalty to his chief, but with an insistent request that after nearly 20 years of public service, he be permitted to return to private life.

The president, accepting the decision, expressed regret, warmly praised the retiring secretary's record of accomplishments since he took charge of the country's foreign affairs four years ago, and bespoke for him a "well merited repose" after the cares of public responsibility.

Ambassador Kellogg, already familiar with many of the outstanding problems of foreign policy through new service at a succession of European conferences, probably will come to Washington soon to serve for a few weeks in the state department before he takes his new post in March. His successor at London has not been selected.

No Break Apparent. Announcement of the impending change was made at the white house today and was heard with surprise by most of official Washington.

Mr. Hughes had indicated that he desired some time in the future to leave public office and resume his private law, but some of those nearest him in official life believed he would remain for at least another year at the head of the state department.

FINANCIAL OPERATIONS OF MORTIMER REVEALED

Chicago, January 10.—Financial operations through which Elias H. Mortimer, Washington agent, obtained a large interest in a Colombian railroad, mining, oil and lumber concession project without the expenditure of time, efforts or money were revealed today in defense testimony in the Veterans' bureau conspiracy trial.

W. D. Pratt, wealthy Kansas City contractor and a member of the Colombian syndicate, said that he authorized the sale of a third of his quarry interest in the project for $2,500 at a time when other members of the syndicate anticipated $100,000 or more in profits.

Mortimer drew a check for $2,500 on a Washington bank. When the check was returned, protested, Mortimer signed a 60-day note for $3,000 to take care of it and added $500 assessment against his share. This note was redeemed 17 months later from the probated estate of a deceased guarantor.

The Colombian enterprise ultimately was abandoned. In the meantime, however, Mortimer had borrowed approximately $3,000 in cash from the guarantor of his note, J. W. Black, St. Louis contractor, ostensibly for the purpose of taking up the outstanding check. It so happened, the testimony said further, that when Black was approached for the loan he was for the moment a bit short of funds, so he borrowed the amount from Pratt and then handed it to Mortimer.

Pratt did not learn for some time, it developed, that he had indirectly loaned the buyer of his share $3,000, with which the same buyer said he hoped to pay for Mr. Pratt's share.

McKenna, resigned, Mr. Stone will continue to hold his place in the cabinet. Action on his nomination has been held up temporarily while examination is made of court records presented to a judicial subcommittee yesterday by James A. O'Neber, of Boulder, Colo.

Long in Public Life

In the selection of Mr. Warren,

ATTORNEY GENERAL TO SUCCEED STONE

CHARLES BEUCHER WARREN.

The president brings to his advisory council a man who has had long experience in the public service and who for years has been one of the leaders of his party. Appointed republican national committeeman from Michigan in 1912, he served for eight years, assisting in that time in revising the procedure of the party organization. Also as chairman of the resolutions committee, he had a large part in drafting the republican platform adopted at Cleveland last June.

Mr. Warren's public service has been wide and varied, bringing into play his skill as a lawyer and his attainments as a diplomat. Besides acting as counsel for the government in controversies with Great Britain and as ambassador to Japan and Mexico, he saw service with the army in the World war and is generally credited with having been the actual author of the selective service act. He was awarded the distinguished service medal by President Wilson.

Service Highly Valued.

The ambassadorship of Mr. Warren to Japan covered the period of the Washington arms conference and his services in that time were understood to have been regarded by the Harding administration as of the highest value. He was appointed in June, 1921, by President Harding, and retired in March, 1923, for personal reasons.

Called to the public service again within two months by President Harding, Mr. Warren, as commissioner to Mexico with John Barton Payne, initiated the negotiations which led to the resumption of diplomatic relations with that country. Subsequently, President Coolidge appointed him ambassador to the southern republic and he served in that capacity from May, 1924, to August, 1924.

First Public Service in 1897.

Mr. Warren was first called to the service of his country in 1897 with his appointment as one of the lawyers to present to the high tribunal at Halifax the case of the United States in the controversy with Great Britain as to the rights of the two nations in the Behring sea. In 1910, he was again called to represent the government before the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague in the controversy as to the claims of the United States and Great Britain in the waters of the North Atlantic.

Mr. Warren is a native of Michigan and was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1891.

of one state to lodge and persons in another state on orders from lodge officers in the latter state is within the protection of the interstate commerce clause of the constitution of the United States, although the selling corporation retains all the title and control of the articles sold."

GOVERNOR ALLEN INSTITUTED SUIT.

Topeka, Kans., January 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—The ouster suit against the Ku Klux Klan in Kansas was instituted by Governor Allen, by Richard J. Hopkins, then attorney general, but prosecution of the case fell to the lot of his successor, Charles B. Griffith. Mr. Griffith, who was appointed to the office of attorney general by Governor Henry J. Allen.

Mr. Hopkins, now a supreme court justice, was ineligible to vote in the suit because of his previous connection with it. Mr. Griffith, present attorney general, was assisted in the prosecution by John F. Rhodes, a former assistant on his staff.

Main Issue in the Case

The main issue in the case was whether the Klan should be entitled to operate in Kansas as a benevolent organization, which requires no charter, or as a corporation for profit, which cannot operate legally without authority granted by the state charter board. The state demanded that the Klan be denied the right to organize and operate in Kansas because it was not a benevolent organization and had no charter. The state urged the court to sustain S. M. Brewster, appointed a commissioner to gather evidence, in his findings that the Klan was not a benevolent or eleemosynary organization as claimed by Klan officials that it was organized for profit in dues collected and regalia sold, and that it was operating in Kansas without a charter. The Klan attorneys urged the court to reverse these findings.

The Klan, however, agreed, with the referee's finding that evidence had not been sufficient to prove methods of coercion and intimidation were used by the Klan in Kansas, while the state took exception and demanded that the court rule there was ample evidence to bear out these allegations.

The Klan, as a state realm of the national organization has never applied for a Kansas charter. The state charter board has three members and one of the outstanding features of the recent political campaign in Kansas was the Klan's unsuccessful efforts to defeat two members of the board. These members, Attorney General Griffith and Secretary of State Frank J. Ryan were re-elected, but by pluralities from 60,000 to 100,000 less than their republican mates on the state ticket were accorded. The third member of the board is the state bank commissioner.

After more than a year spent during the course of which he conducted hearings at a number of cities in which the Klan was active, Commissioner Brewster filed his report with the supreme court last April. The final arguments, however, were not presented in court until November immediately after the general election.

COMMITTEE OF 19 NAMED BY PORTER

tions for submission to a mass meeting about the middle of February. At a meeting held last Thursday, at which every school system involved in the merger was represented, unanimous approval of the project was expressed. Principal advantages and disadvantages of the proposition were discussed, and practically every phase of the consolidation, and its effect on the various systems, was brought out.

John T. Hancock, president of the Atlanta board of education and one of the prime movers in the attempt to effect the consolidation, already has obtained rulings from the attorney general on several legal points bearing on the proposed change in system, and it has been learned that the metropolitan district court can be established by action of the legislature, and that charter amendments probably will not be required.

According to present plans, if the committee decides that the merger is feasible, a referendum will be held late in February, and the matter will be presented to the legislature this year. The need of haste is explained by the fact that unless the general assembly acts this year, nothing can be done until 1927, as under the recently adopted biennial sessions law, the legislature will not meet again until that year.

Will Study Problems.

Members of the committee named by Mr. Porter will study the situation, not only from the effect it would have on their respective school systems, but what the consolidation would mean to all systems, and its effect on educational methods throughout the state.

Practically every school authority, as well as officials of all municipalities and counties affected, has approved the movement, and promised cooperation. Mayor Sims recommended the merger in his annual message to council, and Virlyn B. Moore, chairman of the board of Fulton county commissioners, and Fort E. Land, state school superintendent-elect, have also indicated that they would favor the merger.

Among its chief advantages, its supporters state, would be a uniform system of education; a more economic and efficient system; elimination of schools from all city politics; a considerable saving because of the fact that only one administrative force would be required, in place of four, as at present, and that attendance at practically all schools would be simplified and amplified by assigning students to the schools nearest their homes.

Principal problems to be solved in order to effect the merger and establish the new district are the method of raising finances; location of schools to serve all points of the county, and means by which that part of DeKalb county now included in the Atlanta school district, and the portion of Clayton county now in the College Park school district, could be embodied in the metropolitan district.

Suggestions have been made, and may be accepted, by which operating expenses and other necessary funds could be raised by having the governing body of the new district certify the amounts needed to proper authorities of counties located within the district.

The governing body, according to proposals, would be a board of education composed of seven members, elected either from sub-districts to be created, or from the metropolitan district at large.

WILLIAMS ESTATE SUE FOR $3,000,000

of liberty bonds, various road and improvement bonds of towns and cities including $30,000 bonds of the city of Atlanta. Attorneys estimate the value of the estate at approximately $8,000,000.

Jesse Park Williams was one of the pioneers in developing the turpentine industry in Georgia and Florida and amassed his fortune in this business. He also operated extensively as a dealer in lands and in developing railroads. He died childless. The 51 heirs in North Carolina, in their petition filed here Saturday by Judge Shepard Bryan claim one-half interest in the Williams estate through an agreement they allege was made between their attorneys and Mrs. Cora B. Williams shortly after the death of Mr. Williams.

Terms of Alleged Agreement.

Under the terms of this agreement Mrs. Williams is alleged to have covenanted to devise one-half of the estate to the blood relatives of her husband by will, provided these relatives would refrain from seeking to obtain any share of the estate during her lifetime.

When she died last March, however, she left a will appointing John Lord Nisbet as her executor and leaving her estate to establish a trust fund for the memorial hospital to be erected in her name.

After the death of Williams, however, she left a will appointing John Lord Nisbet as her executor and leaving her estate to establish a trust fund for the memorial hospital to be erected in her name.

Search for Will.

"The heirs were attempting to ascertain the whereabouts of said will and to establish the fact of its existence. They were diligently advancing and establishing said claim and contentions preparing to enter suit upon said claim," said Mrs. Cora B. Williams.

She outlined her complete plan for the administration of the hospital and trust fund. Her executor, John Lord Nisbet, is empowered to name the board of trustees and perform all initial work in creating the trust fund and in building the hospital.

The litigation involves what is said to be one of the largest estates ever left by a Georgia citizen. Mrs. Williams lived for many years in Savannah where he had business headquarters. He moved to Atlanta about 15 years ago. Mrs. Williams, in her own hand, mailed to her and received by said Betsy Williams Parks about six weeks after death of said J. P. Williams.

In this letter, it is alleged in the bill filed by Judge Bryan, the alleged intention of Williams to leave one-half of his estate to his blood relatives was recognized by Mrs. Williams. It is alleged that Mrs. Williams, in this letter, declared she had planned to leave one-half of the estate to these relatives at her death even before she had heard of their activity in investigating the case. It is alleged in the bill that Mrs. Williams wrote she was anxious that no hard feeling should be engendered among the heirs and that if the Williams heirs would drop proceedings and allow her the enjoyment of the properties during her life time she would will to these heirs one-half of the property at her death. She asked that the statement in this letter be circulated among all the heirs.

Accepted Statement.

The bill alleges that the Williams heirs accepted this statement, ceased their activity in investigating the possibility of a will and left Mrs. Williams undisturbed in the possession of the property. When it was discovered that Mrs. Williams had failed to carry out the alleged agreement but on the contrary had left the whole estate to found the memorial hospital under the direction of her executor John Lord Nisbet, proceedings were brought through Judge Bryan to compel the executor to carry out the provisions of the alleged contract. The Williams heirs seek a performance of the contract as far as one-half of the estate is concerned and are not seeking to interfere with the disposition of the other half under the terms of Mrs. Williams' will.

Mrs. Williams left the bulk of her estate, after providing for her two sisters and making minor bequests, for the establishment of a trust fund for the Jesse Park Williams Memorial hospital. It is stipulated that this hospital shall treat only women, female children and males under 12 years of age. She outlined her complete plan for the administration of the hospital and trust fund. Her executor, John Lord Nisbet, is empowered to name the board of trustees and perform all initial work in creating the trust fund and in building the hospital.

The litigation involves what is said to be one of the largest estates ever left by a Georgia citizen. Mrs. Williams lived for many years in Savannah where he had business headquarters. He moved to Atlanta about 15 years ago. Mrs. Williams, in her own hand, mailed to her and received by said Betsy Williams Parks about six weeks after death of said J. P. Williams.

Finance Committee To Hold First Public Hearing Monday

The first public hearing of the 1925 finance committee, at which citizens and civic organizations will be given an opportunity to ask appropriations for the year, will be held at 11 o'clock Monday morning, it was announced Saturday by Alderman W. B. Duvall, chairman of the new committee.

"However, there is little use of holding such hearings," Dr. Duvall said, "as the city has no money to give for anything this year, as it is probable that there will not be enough to care for appropriations needed by various departments, not including any public improvements."

"If we are able to take care of our various departments of city government and work out some solution for the city's scheme, we will be doing remarkably well. The year, judging from present indications, will be one of the leanest financially in the city's history."

Dr. Duvall's expressions were echoed by City Comptroller B. Graham West, who stated that the city's revenue for 1925 actually will be less than expected, whereas approximately $800,000 in appropriations, additional to those ordinarily met, have been promised.

Dr. Duvall stated that in all probability there will be little possibility of a cut in the water rate, as the city needs every cent of revenue, and instead of cutting off any sources, may be forced to seek new ones.

While both Dr. Duvall and Mr. West declined to give figures that will be contained in the tentative finance sheet to be presented to the finance committee Monday, department heads have asked between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000.

Indications are that the city's total revenue for the year will be little more than last year, when it was approximately $8,000,000, and requests of various department heads are certain to be slashed to the bone. Some increase in receipts—about $200,000—is expected from real estate taxes, and there also will be increase in water receipts, but exclusive of those of said J. P. Williams, in her own hand, mailed to her and received by said Betsy Williams Parks about six weeks after death of said J. P. Williams.

In this letter, it is alleged in the bill filed by Judge Bryan, the alleged intention of Williams to leave one-half of his estate to his blood relatives was recognized by Mrs. Williams. It is alleged that Mrs. Williams, in this letter, declared she had planned to leave one-half of the estate to these relatives at her death even before she had heard of their activity in investigating the case. It is alleged in the bill that Mrs. Williams wrote she was anxious that no hard feeling should be engendered among the heirs and that if the Williams heirs would drop proceedings and allow her the enjoyment of the properties during her life time she would will to these heirs one-half of the property at her death. She asked that the statement in this letter be circulated among all the heirs.

Accepted Statement.

The bill alleges that the Williams heirs accepted this statement, ceased their activity in investigating the possibility of a will and left Mrs. Williams undisturbed in the possession of the property. When it was discovered that Mrs. Williams had failed to carry out the alleged agreement but on the contrary had left the whole estate to found the memorial hospital under the direction of her executor John Lord Nisbet, proceedings were brought through Judge Bryan to compel the executor to carry out the provisions of the alleged contract. The Williams heirs seek a performance of the contract as far as one-half of the estate is concerned and are not seeking to interfere with the disposition of the other half under the terms of Mrs. Williams' will.

Mrs. Williams left the bulk of her estate, after providing for her two sisters and making minor bequests, for the establishment of a trust fund for the Jesse Park Williams Memorial hospital. It is stipulated that this hospital shall treat only women, female children and males under 12 years of age. She outlined her complete plan for the administration of the hospital and trust fund. Her executor, John Lord Nisbet, is empowered to name the board of trustees and perform all initial work in creating the trust fund and in building the hospital.

Final Plans Completed For Great Scout Meet In Atlanta on Tuesday

National Scout Executives Are Coming for Greatest Conclave in History of Local Council.

On Tuesday next, which has been proclaimed as "Boy Scout Appreciation Day," the largest scout council in the history of the local scout council will be held in this city, it was announced Saturday by local scout officials. Everything is now in readiness for the meeting, which will open at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning at the Biltmore hotel and will continue through the day, concluding with a banquet on Tuesday night.

There will also be, as features of the day's program, a great scout parade, participated in by all local civic organizations, and a great meeting in the afternoon at the Auditorium. Distinguished visitors for the occasion will include James E. West, chief scout executive of the Boy Scouts of America and editor of "Boys' Life," the scout magazine; Ray O. Wyland, director of education for Boy Scouts, and H. C. Hunter, regional executive for region six, which includes Atlanta and Georgia. Wires were received from these officials Saturday stating that they will arrive here Tuesday morning from Charlotte, N. C., where they will attend the annual conclave of the North and South Carolina district, to be held on Monday.

Cooperation in observance of Tuesday as "Boy Scout Appreciation Day," proclaimed Thursday by Mayor Walter A. Sims, has been promised by all clubs and organizations of Atlanta, churches and citizens, according to Executive A. A. Jameson, of the local scout council.

Special Sermon.
Rev. R. Z. Tyler, pastor of the Epworth Methodist church, Edgewood, Ga., Saturday announced he will preach a special sermon Sunday morning to Boy Scouts, their relatives and friends, on the theme "Scouting." A capacity congregation is anticipated by Rev. Tyler at this service.

In recognition for their meritorious work in the past several scouts from various sections in Georgia will be honored at the Auditorium Tuesday afternoon by being presented with life saving medals and merit badges by Chief Executive West.

William B. Glascock, Jr., 18, of Waycross, Ga., who is a student at Emory university, will be presented with a Lewis H. Beck medal in recognition of his bravery in rescuing Mrs. I. N. Frankenstein, of Brunswick, at Coughing, wheezing, choking Asthma, bronchial asthma, hay fever and shortness of breath would not be dreaded any longer since the discovery of a well known chemist. Now it is possible for those who suffer from this dread disease to "stop these troubles often in a few minutes with Asthma-Tab." It is the amazing statement of one who has taken the treatment. This famous prescription is bringing young, new health and freedom from dread asthma and hay fever to thousands of people where everything else had failed.

"A choking spell was relieved in ten minutes after taking first dose of Asthma-Tab and Mrs. Gower hasn't had a spell of asthma since," says S. P. Gower, Regina, Sask.

The wheezing stopped after two days and the cough and expectation gradually diminished and has practically gone now. Mrs. Gower suffered from Asthma for thirty years and could do no real heavy work, but I am glad to say that since taking Asthma-Tab nothing seems to bother her."

This wonderful formula, prepared by one of the largest laboratories in the world, and generally known as Asthma-Tab, is easily used at home, and seems to work like magic in its rapidity on people of all ages.

No matter how bad your condition, no matter what your age or occupation, no matter what you have tried, if you are suffering from asthma, hay fever, etc., I am so confident that Asthma-Tab will end these troubles that I offer $5 and in every reader of this paper my big $1.00 treatment absolutely free. Scouts who will be officially installed as Eagle Scouts at the Auditorium Tuesday afternoon are Thomas Sanders, troop 9; C. Y. House, Jr., troop 38; Jacob Haas, troop 38, and Billy Sykes, troop 40, and a number of other Georgia scouts. This is the highest honor that can be bestowed on a scout.

Parade In Afternoon.
A principal feature of the day will be the big parade which will form at 3:45 o'clock in the afternoon at Peachtree and Baker streets, headed by Governor Walker, Mayor Walter A. Sims and high scout officials. The parade will proceed down Peachtree to Edgewood, thence to the Auditorium where the demonstration will be held.

Executive West will speak at the banquet on "The National Scope of Scouting," and Willis A. Sutton, superintendent of Atlanta public schools, will follow him, speaking on "Fundamentals of the Boy Scout Program."

Windows of homes where Boy Scouts live were decorated Saturday with cards reading "A Boy Scout Lives Here."

Parents of Atlanta scouts are manifesting much interest in the big celebration Tuesday, according to Executive Jameson, and a number of them will participate in events of the day.

A special room in the Biltmore hotel has been reserved by scout officials to display scout photographs and a large shipment of portraits has been received here for display at the hotel.

First Eagle Scout.
Tribute will be paid Roy C. Smathers, local insurance man, at the Auditorium by leading scout officials. He was the first Eagle Scout in America, having received his highest honor in 1915 in Canton, N. C.

At this meeting a check-up of the progress of 1924 will be made by Chief Executive West, and plans for 1925 will be reviewed.

"Within the past year," the scout chief recently stated, "the Boy Scout in America has gained over 100,000 new members. Plans will be perfected at this meeting for an intensive campaign through which scout leaders expect to bring the total even larger. Scouting is organized in 38 countries with a membership of 1,205,243 men and boys."

In accordance with his custom, the chief scout executive will inspect many troops as his limited time here will allow. His entire trip will cover nine of the southern states, as well as Ohio and West Virginia. Approximately one-quarter of the entire Boy Scout membership of the United States, which numbers 542,862, is enrolled within this area.

Honorary Escort.
Troop 11 has been designated by officials to be honorary escort for Messrs. West and Wyland.

The meeting here will open at 9 o'clock in the morning at the Biltmore hotel, as soon after the arrival of Messrs. West and Wyland as possible and continuing through the final banquet in the evening.

Following are clubs and organizations which will have decorated automobiles in the parade: Atlanta Advertising club, Senior and Junior Chamber of Commerce, Civitan club, Retail Merchants' association, Atlanta Woman's club, West End Woman's club, Standard club, Young Men's Christian association, Young Women's Christian association, American Legion, Knights of Columbus, police and fire departments, Jewish Progressive club, Lions club, public schools, board of education and city and state officials.

Baltimore Girl
For Jewel Theft

Baltimore, Md., January 10.—Word was received today of the arrest at Los Angeles, Cal., of a young woman known to police here as Mrs. Mabel Moore, on a charge of embezzling $4,600 worth of jewels from F. Bucher & Sons, Baltimore jewelers. It is understood that she was registered at a Los Angeles hotel as Mrs. Mabel Jackson.

Mrs. Moore, local police say, is from Washington and a member of a prominent Virginia family, whose name they refuse to reveal.

The alleged embezzlement occurred last December 2, but the report was not made public.

The young woman, who is 20 years old, called at the jewelry store, police said, and asked if she could make a purchase and have it charged. When she proved to the satisfaction of the jeweler that her parents were, she was told she could make any purchase she wished.

She selected two diamond bracelets, valued at $2,400 each, and asked that the bill be sent to her at her parents' home in Washington. Investigation revealed that the woman's parents knew nothing of the purchases.

Detectives found one of the bracelets in a Baltimore pawnshop. The woman was traced to Los Angeles, and the police of that city were asked to find her.

Training School Manager Points Out Difficulties

"Editor Constitution: The letter of Judge Bale, of Floyd county, and your strong editorial in Friday's paper are very much to the point and both call attention to the great service being rendered in our state by the Boys' Training school at Milledgeville and the Girls' Training school near Atlanta."

"I have recently been made chairman of the board of managers of the Georgia Training School for Girls, located 10 miles west of Atlanta, succeeding Hon. Wilmer L. Moore. Mr. Moore resigned last year after having done 10 years of the finest type of constructive work in putting the Girls' Training school on a proper basis."

"There are two points in Judge Bale's letter in regard to the Training School for Girls to which I wish to call attention. First, the school is not crowded so far as occupancy of all the buildings is concerned. One building, the Harriet Hawkins home, is entirely vacant for the reason that the annual appropriations made by the state legislature since 1920 have not been sufficient to allow the board to take the girls that would occupy this building.

Many Turned Away.
"This cuts our usefulness 40 per cent and makes us refuse admission to many that could be vastly helped by being in this school."

The second point is a statement by Judge Bale that the impression in the legislature is that the Girls' school is run as an Atlanta institution and not for the good of the whole state. I regret to know that there is such an impression and wish to state that it is based on wrong information. The authorities of the school make it a point to see that the great number of demands made upon them by the several courts of Atlanta does not crowd out the girls coming from all parts of the state. We make an earnest effort to disburse the admission as widely as possible.

"The school is greatly indebted to a very fine type of work for girls, but this work is done solely because the institution is convenient to Atlanta and not because the girls are from Atlanta."

Men's Club Active.
"The Business Men's Evangelistic Club of Atlanta has had charge of the religious work at the school for many years and are doing a most wonderful piece of work. A number of women's organizations, both in and out of the churches, are interested in the school, but all of this does not make the school authorities lose sight of the fact that the school is to serve the entire state."

"If the legislature could see the crying need for making a place for the many girls that should be trained at this school and that cannot be taken in on account of the smallness of the state appropriation, and if they could see the fine results that are obtained in the vast majority of cases as they leave the school and feel sure that the appropriations would be increased to a sufficient amount so that every available space would be occupied by some girl that needs this training. Yours very truly,

GEORGE WHITE,
Chairman Board of Managers Georgia Training School for Girls.

Atlanta Biltmore Report Shows Patronage Beyond Expectations of Builders

Jump of Over 100 Per Cent in All Departments in Last Quarter Revealed in Latest Report.

Showing a tremendous increase in the volume of business in all departments for the three-month period ending December 31, the quarterly report of the Atlanta Biltmore has just been completed by the management.

The latest audits of the Atlanta Biltmore accounts reveal that the hotel is making a better financial showing during its first year of operation than that of any other hotel of the great Bowman group, with the exception of the Los Angeles Biltmore, which opened its doors at the height of the Los Angeles boom.

Figures compiled reveal that during the quarter there was an increase of 115 per cent in the room patronage; an increase of 114 per cent in the number of persons seated in the dining departments; and an increase of 120 per cent in the volume of banquet business.

Big Patronage Increase.
The substantial increase in room patronage is said to be due to the larger commercial business enjoyed by the hotel, the stimulated tourist travel, and to the growing practice of out-of-town Georgians to shop in Atlanta.

If the 8,700 banquet meals are included, a total of 50,044 meals were served to guests at the Atlanta Biltmore during the quarter just ended, it is stated.

Previous reports covering July, August and September had shown substantial increases in the general volume of business transacted over the first months of operation.

This information on the progress of the Atlanta Biltmore which was formally opened on April 23, 1924, will be of almost interest throughout the south, as well as locally.

According to Atlanta civic leaders, the magnificent hostelry has become a great civic and cultural center for the community in addition to offering the traveling public the same facilities for rest and comfort as are found in the greatest hotels of the world.

Influence in Atlanta.
There is no phase of Atlanta life which has not been directly touched by the Atlanta Biltmore and the wide range of civic, social and cultural activities which have had the Biltmore and its public rooms for their setting.

Truly a history of the Atlanta Biltmore and the growth of its business would be a narrative of an important part of Atlanta's commercial, social and artistic life. It would begin last April, during Metropolitan grand opera, when the Biltmore housed the principal stars of the company, and when daily teas and concerts assembled hundreds of Atlantans and opera visitors in the public rooms and at the all fresco parties on the garden terrace.

It would include the great exhibit of the Grand Central Art galleries, when thousands of southerners visited the Biltmore and viewed the works of prominent artists on display under the auspices of the chamber of commerce art committee and the Atlanta Art association.

It would embrace the morning musicales of the Atlanta Music club, which have attracted the city's music-lovers to the Georgian ballroom twice monthly; and the meeting of the Drama league, where the readings of America's foremost plays have been enjoyed by hundreds of prominent Atlantans.

The same history would embrace the fashionable entertainments, the specious buffet suppers, and the scores of tea-dances, popularized by the Atlanta Biltmore and welcomed by the fashionable set as a long-felt want, and Enrico Leide's Sunday dinner-concerts, attended by Atlanta's social leaders; and the weekly dinner-dances sponsored by the Debutantes' club.

Its Commercial Value.
From the commercial aspect, the value of the Biltmore to the city is evidenced by its tremendous convention and banquet patronage. It is stated that the presence of the Biltmore here has brought to the city at least three conventions of importance which otherwise would have gone to much larger cities. Thousands of convention visitors have registered at the Biltmore and bookings for the immediate future indicate a continuation of this splendid business.

Among the most notable conventions at the Biltmore since its opening were: the recent S. A. E. fraternity convention, which brought several hundred prominent visitors; the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs; the American Association of Periodontologists; the Georgia State Dental society; the Jaycees' fraternity; the Southern Wholesale Shoe Dealers' association, and others.

There is hardly a civic organization in the city which has not held dinner meetings at the Biltmore. Organizations which have utilized the banquet facilities include the President's club, the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, the Kiwanis club, the Civic club, the Atlanta Association of Credit men, the Rotary club, the Atlanta Retail Merchants' association, the Georgia Industrial Lenders' association, the Ten club, the Junior Chamber of Commerce, Yaarab temple, the American Legion, the Southern Shoe Dealers' association, the Traffic Club of Atlanta, the Atlanta Association of Building Owners and Managers, and others.

Gives Aid To Leaders.
Automobile executives and leaders of the allied industries have seen the advantages offered by the Biltmore for sales conferences and conventions, and some of the largest companies, including Dodge, Packard, Ford, Buick, Chevrolet and Lincoln, and White truck, have centered their sales gatherings and displays at the Biltmore. The following other big automotive factors have been prominent on the Biltmore function lists: Fix Tire company, General Motors, B. F. Goodrich company, United States Rubber company, Delco Lighting company.

Other concerns and organizations included on the lists of conventions, conferences and dinners include: the Coca-Cola company, the Adair Realty and Trust company, the Nu-Grape company, the Cornell university alumni, the Telephone Pioneers, the Fifth District Dental society, the Catholic club, the Atlanta League of Women Voters, the Southeastern Accounting association, the Southern Bell Telephone company, the Western Electric company, the Supreme Court Judges of Georgia, the American Radiator company, the Better Home Lighting committee, the Community Chest, the Mutual Life Insurance company, the Southeastern club, the Atlanta Film Board of Trade, the Franklin Insurance company, the Federal Council of Churches, the Builders' club, the American Mill company, and others, including the following college and fraternal organizations:

Alpha Lambda Tau, Auburn alumni, Georgia Tech alumni, Phi Delta Phi, Kappa Alpha, Sigma Theta Pi, Pi Kappa, Georgia Tech Cotillion, Cornell Glee clubs, 1923 class of Emory, 1904 class of Emory, Candler School of Theology alumni, Scabard and Blade, Alpha Delta Sigma, Delta Pi Delta, Delta Tau Delta, Pi Kappa Phi, Psi Omega and others.

The Biltmore held the interest of southern sports lovers during the ball season, due to the presence of many of the gridiron stars and visiting fans who made the Biltmore headquarters. The following teams made the Biltmore official headquarters: Florida, Vanderbilt, V. M. I., Alabama and Penn State.

AN OLD RECIPE TO RESTORE GRAY HAIR

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea with sulphur added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Just a few applications will have a revealing effect if your hair is fading, streaked or gray. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur Compound at any drug store all ready for use. This is the old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients.

While wispy, gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared, and, after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant.—(adv.)

Governor and Son Face Arrest in Pardon Case

SOLONS TO PROBE ADMINISTRATION FOR ALL LAXITIES

Kansas Attorney General Declares Pollman Pardon Is Only One of Many Irregularities.

GOVERNOR DENIES SALE; SON ABSOLVES HIM

Alleged Go-Between Swears That Executive Charged Him With Mission to Arrange Deal.

County Attorney To Issue Warrants

Kansas City, Mo., January 10.—Tinkham Vase, county attorney of Shawnee county, Kansas, indicated tonight he would issue warrants for the arrest of Governor Jonathan M. Davis and the governor's son, Russell C. Davis, as a result of the alleged sale of a pardon to Fred W. Pollman, convicted banker. An expose of how the pardon had been sold was published this morning in the Kansas City Journal.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS. Topeka, Kan., January 10.—Talk of legislative canvass of the pardon and parole records was crystallizing among Kansas legislators tonight as they gathered here for the opening of the 1925 legislature next Tuesday. In the wake of the disclosure of an alleged payment of money to Russell Davis, son of Governor Jonathan M. Davis, for the delivery of a pardon, there came increasing reports today of other alleged irregularities.

At least a dozen accusations have come to the attorney general's office within the last two weeks, declared Attorney General C. B. Griffith today. None has been thoroughly probed, nothing to warrant charges has been revealed, but investigation has been conducted quietly by his department, Mr. Griffith stated.

Says Son Unsubstantiated. Through a day of charges and denials, Russell, whose entrapment in a Topeka hotel yesterday led to the exposure, declined to utter any word in the matter until late this afternoon when he issued a short statement admitting acceptance of the money from Pollman and absolving his father of any knowledge of the matter.

Governor Davis earlier in the day issued a statement to the people of Kansas, reiterating his avowal of his own innocence in the matter and attributing to his son's "unsubstantiated nature" his falling into "indiscreet acts."

The governor has never denied that his son accepted money for delivering his executive pardon yesterday to Fred W. Pollman, paroled forger, and former president of the Linn County

Christmas Rush Rivalled By "Twin-Matching" Mail

POSTOFFICE FLOODED WITH PACKAGES

BY PIERRE VAN PAASSEN. They're rubbing their eyes at the postoffice. "Never knew the Christmas rush to die down and suddenly pick up again in the middle of January." Still the unheard-of thing continues unabated. Parcels, letters, packages pile up in little heaps on the floors, grow into small hills, and before many hours are over assume the appearance of a set of young mountains.

Once in a while, when the assemblage of Constitution mail threatens to obstruct the business of the Atlanta postoffice, postoffice authorities rush extra divisions of clerks to deal with the situation. These sons of Hercules go about the matter with vindictive and determined gusto and ship the obstructing mountains away to The Constitution office.

Everybody Matching Twins. Never in the history of Atlanta has there been such a response from the public to a newspaper contest as has been the case in The Constitution's Twin-Matching contest, which closed Saturday night, after running for nine weeks.

Before the citizenry had wended its way to the daily task in office or workshop Saturday morning, forty-three sacks of mail were delivered at

UNDERWOOD BILL GETS FINAL TEST EARLY THIS WEEK

Vote on Jones Amendment Is Matter of Life or Death to Alabamian's Shoals Proposal.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS. Washington, January 10.—The Underwood Muscle Shoals bill will engage in a battle for its life early next week, when it meets the Jones amendment to refer the problem to a commission.

This amendment, presented by the republican whip, is regarded by senate leaders as the most serious obstacle to the measure's final passage and they all admit that the vote will be close. A final vote, not later than Tuesday, is now the aim of the leaders.

Efforts to get a conclusive roll call today failed and Senator Norris, republican, Nebraska, who has led the fight against the Alabama senator's bill, blocked attempts by Senator Curtis, republican leader, to fix a time for a vote and to limit debate. The Nebraska senator said although he was ready for a vote he refused to enter into an agreement because something might arise which would need discussion.

Another effort will be made Monday.

SECRETARY WORK APPROVES PARK IN GREAT SMOKIES

Site for National Preserve in Tennessee and North Carolina Favored in Public Statement.

BY THOMAS STOKES. Washington, January 10.—(Special.)—Secretary of the Interior Work is in favor of establishing two national parks, instead of one, in the eastern section of the United States, one to be located in the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia and the other in the Smoky mountain area bordering on Tennessee and North Carolina, he made known in a statement Saturday.

The special commission, which made an intensive study of the southern mountain area, including northeastern Georgia, recently recommended in a report to Secretary Work that the site of the national park be in the Blue Ridge mountains of Virginia. It spoke highly of the Smoky mountain region, but expressed the opinion that its development would be difficult on

THREE ARE HELD IN MURDER CASE

Five Negroes, Including Three Women, Are Jailed as Material Witnesses in Killing of James.

Three men are held for murder, and five—including three negro women—as material witnesses upon recommendation of the coroner's jury, impounded Saturday afternoon in the Harry G. Poole funeral parlors to prepare the murder of Fred James, whose body was found in Lowe's alley early Thursday morning.

The three negroes held for murder are Grady Slaughter, Charlie Walton and Sol Oliver, all of whom were implicated by their own statements and testimony of witnesses who live near the scene.

Mrs. Mamie James—16-year-old wife of the murdered man—became hysterical when the ax, used to kill her husband, and his blood-soaked hat were displayed as evidence at the inquest, and she was taken to her home for medical attention.

Incriminating Evidence. The most incriminating testimony of the inquest was brought out when Mattie May Brown—a negro girl living in the same house with Walton—was called to the stand.

SENTIMENT GROWS AGAINST MATCHING FEDERAL SUBSIDIES

Bribes' to States In Order to Get Government Appropriations Seen to Encourage Extravagance.

BY MARK SULLIVAN. Washington, January 10.—President Coolidge last month, in a message sent to congress one day, said: "It is an ominous fact that only the federal government is reducing its debt. Others (that is, local state, county and city governments) are increasing theirs at about $1,000,000,000 each year."

The day before, in another message to congress, President Coolidge went more extensively into this subject of the increase of debt, and the consequent increase of taxation, by local governments. He was alluding to the fact that not only do these local governments increase their debts and taxation rather wildly of their own initiative, but also, they are led to go still further by a practice of congress, which President Coolidge does not believe in. President Coolidge said:

Against State Subsidies. "For federal aid to states the estimates provide in excess of $100,000,000. These subsidies are prescribed by law. I am convinced that the broadening of this field of activity is detrimental both to federal and state governments. Efficiency of federal operations is impaired as their scope is unduly enlarged. Efficiency of state governments is impaired as they relinquish and turn over to the federal government responsibilities which are rightfully theirs. I am opposed to any expansion of these subsidies. My conviction is they can be curtailed with benefit to both the federal and state governments."

The practice President Coolidge was alluding to is known in congress as "fifty-fifty" appropriations. That means congress appropriates upward of $100,000,000 and says to the states, in effect: "You can have this $100-

(Editor's Note: Miss Estelle Bradley, of 584 Atlanta avenue, who was "Miss Atlanta" in The Constitution's tournament last year to select this city's most beautiful girl for the Atlantic City National Beauty tournament, is now playing leads in Mermaid comedies opposite Lige Conley, the popular screen comedian. Miss Bradley is under contract until next April with White Productions, Inc., producers of Mermaid comedies, and that concern has an option on her services for three years after April of this year. In the following article written for The Constitution, Miss Bradley tells of her experiences in filmland.)

BY ESTELLE BRADLEY. Hollywood, Cal., January 10.—(Special.)—I have finally concluded that way back in the stone age savage man in a more tender moment must have built his little air castles.

Perhaps big air castles were not as kaleidoscopic as the more civilized range is capable of creating, but they must have been the air castles of a one-track mind, and just as all you folks who read this have had your little air castles, so have I built mine.

That I have been more fortunate than most dreamers is something that I appreciate, and so I want to use this as a medium of thanking the judges of The Atlanta Constitution's beauty tournament who have made it possible for me to at least prove myself worthy of their consideration.

When I represented my good friends in the Atlantic City pageant, which was held last September, I never thought that it would prove a stepping stone to realize that which I have so far experienced.

Warner Gives Opportunity. S. L. Warner of The Warner Brothers West Coast studios, Hollywood, Cal., was the first good genius who moved back the portal at my cry of "Open Sesame." Warner offered me an opportunity to work at his studios. From the time the invitation was tendered, and until I arrived in Hollywood on the first of October, I migh' say that my mind was not my own.

I conjured up all sorts of mythical pictures of Hollywood. It seems strange that this little city should be located west on this great continent, for it belies its position and bears the traditions of an eastern Mecca.

I can imagine no greater event in my life than the day I applied my first motion picture makeup and I cannot imagine anything ever happening to me that will ever replace that particular thrill as I walked upon the stage. Just a maze of lights obliterating all else from my sight. I was drawn to it as a moth and I

PROSPEROUS ERA SEEN IN REPORT OF STATE AUDITOR

Financial Condition of State Shows Marked Improvement Over Past Five Years

Indications that Georgia is returning to the sound financial condition of five years ago is shown in a report of the state's improved fiscal affairs submitted Saturday to Governor Clifford Walker by Sam J. Slate, state auditor, in which it is stated that collections of taxes have been much better than last year and the state has been able to pay all appropriations of the legislature promptly. The interesting fact is cited also that notwithstanding heavy demands made on the treasury no department of state or state institution has been required to wait one day upon requisitions for their regular needs.

Governor Clifford Walker issued a statement expressing gratification over the improved conditions of the treasury as indicated by Auditor Slate's report. He pointed out, however, that the material increases benefits only a few restricted classes such as old soldiers, common schools and highways. He said other departments are suffering with "growing pains" and that there is still a great need for a readjustment of the tax system of the state.

The report of the auditor shows that all Confederate pensioners were paid at one time last April the first time this has happened in ten years. It is shown also that the common schools of the state received one payment of $100,000 out of the so-called 50 per cent clause of the school law and this is the first payment of this kind ever made in the state as the clause is optional in its nature and not compulsory.

Tax Reform Needed. In discussing the report Governor Walker said: "I am naturally gratified that the condition of the treasury, as indicated by the report of the

DRIVE TO CHANGE ATLANTA CHARTER BEGUN SATURDAY

Committee of Five Named by Councilman Inman to Select Steering Committee for Movement.

PLAN MASS MEETING AT CITY AUDITORIUM

Haste Is Urged So That Amendment May Be Presented To Legislature at Session This Year.

Appointment of five prominent Atlantans as a nominating committee, which in turn will name a steering committee, Saturday inaugurated the drive of the Atlanta League of Women Voters to replace the present form of city government with the council-manager form.

The nominating committee, composed of Mrs. Norman Sharp, Luther Still, Jerome Jones, A. J. Orme and Ivan Allen, was appointed by Councilman Ed H. Inman, who last month was named temporary chairman of the organization. It is expected that the committee will meet next week to take first steps toward selecting an organizing committee, which will draft rules and by-laws preparatory to making a permanent organization of those who would institute the new form of government here.

All Are Interested. All members of the committee are vitally interested in the change of government. Mrs. Sharp is president of the Atlanta Federation of Women's Clubs, and for some time has taken an active interest in city government and civic affairs.

Mr. Still is prominent in labor ranks, and last year was a candidate for the legislature from Fulton county as a representative of labor. Mr. Jones also is well known in labor circles, and as editor of The Journal of Labor he has been active in the campaign for a new charter here.

Mr. Orme is vice president of the Atlanta Trust company, while Mr. Allen is a well-known Atlanta business man, a member of the firm of Ivan Allen-Marshall company. Both have advocated a change in the form of city government for some time.

Mass Meeting Proposed. According to present plans, the rules and by-laws drawn by the steering committee will be presented to the public at a mass meeting at the City Auditorium as soon as possible. At that time it is expected the permanent organization will be formed, and, according to plans of the League of Women Voters, will remain in effect until a new form of government eventually is adopted in this city.

Mrs. Sanford Gay, president of the league, has urged all possible haste in putting the movement under way, explaining that a charter amendment would be required to change the form of government, and that if action is not taken by the legislature this year, nothing could be done until 1927, as the general assembly does not meet in 1926.

Members of the league, as well as others behind the proposition, have

LAW AND ORDER MEETING DELAYED

Governor Walker Announces Postponement Is Due to Inability of Many Officials to Attend

A conference on law enforcement, called to meet at the Capitol January 13, has been postponed to a date to be announced later, Governor Walker, leader of the movement, stated Saturday night.

"Upon checking the responses to the invitation extended to court officials and others interested in the enforcement of law to make addresses and lead the discussions," said the chief executive, "it appears that a majority of those invited are engaged elsewhere and cannot be present. I have, therefore, determined to postpone the conference to a later date, when a more representative attendance is assured. Notice of the new date will be given through the press."

The governor called the conference following the reporting of several floggings and other crimes to him. At the same time, he offered standing rewards for the arrest and conviction of parties, "masked or unmasked" participating in floggings.

ACCORD INCLUDES AMERICAN CLAIMS FOR WAR DAMAGES

Ratification by Individual Governments of Settlements Made by Envoys Is Regarded as Certain.

U. S. WAITS TWO YEARS BEFORE GETTING MONEY

Belgian Priority Claims Under Dawes Plan Will Be Paid First, According to Allied Agreement.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS. Paris, January 10.—The work of the finance ministers, who have been in conference here for several days on financial problems connected with German reparations, ended tonight when a general agreement was reached by the United States, Great Britain, Italy, France, Belgium and Japan on broad lines on all the questions on the agenda.

The British and American delegations both announced an accord, also, subject to Washington's approval, on the question of payment of war damage claims to the United States. The work will now be confined to the deliberations of the experts and the drafting committee's preparation of resolutions for ratification by a plenary session of the conference Tuesday.

U. S. Payment Delayed. Neither the British nor American delegation would divulge the details of the solutions reached, but a note issued by the semi-official French news agency states that the Americans have agreed to wait for two years before sharing the plan of annuities, or until Belgium has received the full amount of her priority. This is variously estimated at between 100,000,000 and 200,000,000 gold marks. Experts are fixing the exact figure.

On the other hand, it is known that $15,000,000 now in the federal reserve bank, the proceeds of Belgium's payments under the Wadsworth agreement, will be released and become available to the United States treasury as soon as the present accord is ratified.

Extended Over 26 Years. It is asserted in French circles that the French and British delegates have agreed to admit the United States to participation in the Dawes annual on the reparations account but extending the payments over a period of 26 years, beginning September, 1926, reimbursing the sums due on the costs of the American army of occupation first, then the payment of war damages.

The United States' claims—costs of the army of occupation and war damages—will be grouped (together in a sum in the protocol, upon which yearly payments will be made.

Neither the British nor the Americans displayed any elation or undue enthusiasm over the conclusion of the three-day fight. The fact that the settlement must be referred to Washington, however, appeared to weigh more heavily upon the American delegates than the British. Winston Churchill's optimism far outshone that of the Americans.

Resolutions Presented Tuesday.

The Use of Money

Make, save, give! This applied to money is the only kind of financing that abounds in plenty and ends in honor.

A man gets dross when he labors for gold because the glitter it gives. The real delights of life come from higher heights than he reaches in his gamble for gold.

The man who exalts himself because of the money he has is very likely to exhaust his ability to keep it. The fool and his money fall apart.

WOMAN ARRESTED ON POISON CHARGE

Baltimore, Md., January 10.—Less than an hour after her return from burial services for her husband, William Merriman, of Owings Mills, today, Mrs. Willy J. Merriman was arrested on a charge of causing his death by poison.

A charge of murder in the first degree was placed against her tonight when she was locked up without bail in the county jail, pending a preliminary hearing Wednesday.

Baltimore chemists have been ordered by H. Courtney Jenifer, state attorney of Baltimore county, to make an analysis of Merriman's stomach for traces of poisoning.

Investigation of Merriman's death was begun on Wednesday when the coroner was notified by hospital staff physicians attending the death. An autopsy performed on Wednesday by the city post-mortem physician revealed that Merriman's death was caused by any one of four conditions which might have resulted from poison.

GOVERNOR AND SON TO BE ARRESTED

bank at LaCygne. But Governor Davis has professed innocence of any knowledge of the proceedings. He had issued the pardon for the reason, he asserted, having always been favorable to Pollman, whom he now charges with "inveigling" his son into the indiscretion, through friendship.

Interest centered tonight in the expected arrival of State Senator James W. Finley, of Chanute, chairman of the investigating committee in which the 1923 session vested authority to look into any and all state departments and to report its findings to the 1925 session. Whether the committee will undertake an investigation on short notice, it was believed, rested with Senator Finley. Other members in investigation by the new legislature would be the only means to throw light on what is now an obscure situation.

Governor-elect Ben S. Paulsen would not commit himself as regards any action by the legislature.

"I believe," he said, "that if the things written in the papers are true, and I haven't had time to read them all—an investigation of some sort is necessary; and if it is not true, then certainly Governor Davis must want an investigation to clear his son's name. But it is not any matter for me to consider now."

Grand Juries Hampered.—There is a feeling of some delicacy among legislators as to launching an investigation which would involve Governor Davis, according to Charles S. Holbrook, veteran state representative from Kansas City, Kan. In view of the fact that the legislature, ever since its inception, has been constantly clashed with the executive, he said it was felt that such a move might seem to be partisan.

Attorney General Griffith suggested a bi-partisan committee of the solons as the most effective and just method of baring the facts, Kansas has no grand jury, he said, except the county grand juries, which may operate only within their own county borders. The legislature, he pointed out, could pursue a statewide investigation.

Governor Davis was wholly unaware of any payment of $4,000 by Mrs. W. A. Nixon, in securing a pardon for her husband this week, he said. Nixon had been serving a life term for the murder of A. J. Banta, Great Bend attorney.

Sold Her Home.—According to a story published in Wichita, Kan., Mrs. Nixon had sold her home to R. C. Gates, democratic state senator from Stevens county, for $4,000 and had used the money to obtain Nixon's pardon.

"I don't know how much it cost Mrs. Nixon," the governor said. "It must have been a large sum, however, as she employed a high-priced attorney."

Sam Amidon, Wichita attorney and democratic national committeeman for Kansas, represented Mrs. Nixon in the hearings before Governor Davis. Judge S. S. Irwin, parole clerk, said today that Pollman's parole would have expired April 1, this year, thus restoring him to full citizenship. The governor's friends pointed to this fact in support of their theory that the $1,250 paid by Pollman to Irwin sold Davis was furnished by some other source to "frame" the governor.

Stiff Joints Now Limbered Up By New Oil Formula

Remarkable New Discovery Gives Quick, Soothing Relief For Creaky, Swollen, Painful Joints.

German chemistry that has given to the world aspirin for headache pain and novocaine for painless dentistry has now come forward with another discovery that makes enlarged, swollen, pain-racked joints a thing of the past. A combination of certain oils, known as Bulger Oil, has been discovered, which is simply rubbed on and disappears in a few seconds, showing how quickly it penetrates and is absorbed by the tissues. Even in the most severe and stubborn cases, almost instant relief has been obtained. Swollen, painful and distorted joints, whether it be in the ankle, knee, thigh, shoulder, neck, wrist, elbow or fingers of your hand, are due to some infection which has involved the tissue lining of the joints. This, in most cases, can be traced to internal poisons, such as a blind toe pocket in a tooth or a diseased tonsil giving off poisons, which are carried in the blood to the joints thereby setting up an infection of the delicate membrane lining the joints and causing the joints to become enlarged, swollen, creaky and extremely painful. Bulger Oil, when applied to the affected joints, is readily absorbed by the tissues and penetrates quickly to the aching joint, neutralizing the pain-causing poisons in much the same way as Milk of Magnesia neutralizes an acid stomach. Give Bulger Oil today and try a few applications in one evening. It gives quick results because it is instantly absorbed and contains a special ingredient which at once penetrates to the poison-laden membrane in the joint-causing swelling. Your druggist has it and we guarantee it to help you or it costs you nothing. Sold by Jacobs Pharmacy Co. (12 stores) E. H. Cone, A. L. Curtis, Tucker, Thacker, Franklin & Co., Marshall & Fox—(adv.)

politically. Pollman himself today said he would not have given the amount to secure a pardon when he had been at liberty two years and would be entirely free in a few weeks.

RUSSELL DAVIS ABSOLVES FATHER.

Topeka, Kan., January 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—In his first statement since his involvement in an alleged deal in which he was said to have received $12,500 for delivering a pardon, Russell Davis, son of Governor Jonathan M. Davis, of Kansas, late today declared his father had known nothing of the affair.

Young Davis declared he had taken to his own room in the executive mansion the $1,000 given him as a "first installment" by Fred W. Pollman, pardoned forger. His father had not been aware of the payment, he asserted.

The statement follows: "In regard to the Pollman pardon, I have no statement to make, other than my father knew nothing about my conversation that I had with Pollman down on our farm, in Kansas City, or in the National hotel yesterday; until I told him about it at about 6:30 o'clock Friday afternoon."

"On his and my mother's account, I regret being so foolish as to be led into such a trap as was set for me." "RUSSELL DAVIS."

GOVERNOR DAVIS DENIES PARDON SALE.

Topeka, Kan., January 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Governor Jonathan M. Davis today issued the following statement to the people of Kansas concerning the alleged bribe of his son for delivering a pardon: "In regard to the published statements regarding the pardon issued to Fred W. Pollman, I want to say first that I know nothing whatever of Mr. Pollman's visit to my son at the farm or his negotiations with my son until 6:30 o'clock yesterday evening."

"I had known Pollman, not intimately, but in a general way by reputation, for many years, some four or five before his bank failed at LaCygne, Kan. "I had been called as a character witness in his trial when Pollman was convicted and had been familiar more or less with the facts brought out at the trial. I had felt that under the circumstances of the failure and no one having suffered any loss that there had been no need of persecuting Pollman. Accordingly, when his attorney, John Crane, asked me to write a letter to Governor Allen recommending his parole, I had done so in October, 1922. Governor Allen had pardoned him in January, 1923."

Denies Talk of Money.—"I had met and talked with Pollman several times and he afterwards advised me and I gave him a conditional discharge."

"He had talked with me in regard to a pardon, telling me of some coal interests in Illinois that he wanted to develop; that he would be hampered in the development until he was restored to full citizenship, but at no time had I ever talked with him regarding a money consideration or any other sort of consideration in respect to what I might or might not do for him. I never referred him to anyone who could help to get a pardon, neither did I ever send anyone to him or tell anyone to convey any message to him regarding his pardon."

"His case was to have come up for hearing on the 27th day of December. He wrote me and told me he would not be here on that day and I wrote him that the hearing could be held any day that he could come to my office while I was still in office."

Wanted to Avoid Publicity.—"When my son asked me what I was going to do in the case of Pollman, I told him that I thought perhaps I would pardon him, so when he came yesterday and told me that Pollman was in town and he wanted to have his pardon issued it occasioned no more than passing notice. I told him that Mr. Pollman ought to come up here and get it and he said that he would do so. At 6:30 he told me what had happened at the hotel."

Denies Davis Deal.—"The statements regarding Davis are untrue where they say that I talked to Glen Davis about a money consideration for his parole and commutation, or in respect to a pardon for Pollman. Pollman had first called my attention to Glen Davis as an inmate of the penitentiary and had taken quite an interest in him and mentioned him frequently to me. The board of administration had also been attracted to Davis by his outstanding work in the institution."

"Davis had been about my office in and out for several days about the time I issued his parole and commutation. The board of administration, as I remember, had recommended a full and complete pardon, but I did not think his case warranted that action and so had given him a parole with commutation to 20 years. He was dissatisfied apparently with this; at least he stayed about a day or two trying to persuade me to give him more of a cut."

Son Unsophisticated.—"This I want to reiterate, that I considered Glen Davis' parole and commutation on the merits of the case and gave him what I thought the record indicated he should have without any thought of any money consideration, and that I considered Pollman's case on its merits and the information I had regarding it without any knowledge or thought of consideration of a monetary nature, so that while some of the statements in the story are true, they have been able to build up enough falsehood and by taking advantage of my friendship for Pollman and Davis and of the unsophisticated nature of my son to inveigle him into some mischievous acts. I am sure he did not realize the gravity of his actions or he would have consulted me and been saved from the humiliation."

"I have held these parole hearings at all times with an open door and at no time and in no case have I been influenced by the payment of any money."

"I am sure a full and complete investigation of all the records and files in the parole cases I have gone over will show just basis for the decision reached in each case."

GLENN A. DAVIS ACCUSES GOVERNOR.

Kansas City, Mo., January 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Glenn A. Davis, tailor-instructor at the Hutchinson (Kan.) reformatory, relates in an affidavit made public by the Kansas City Journal-Post here tonight, that Governor Jonathan M. Davis, of Kansas, refused his request for a pardon from the Kansas state penitentiary, after he had rejected a request of the governor for money. The affidavit also states that Glenn A. Davis, who is at liberty on parole after having served part of a sentence for murder, acted as the governor's agent in an attempt to collect a $1,250 bribe from Fred W. Pollman, who sought a pardon from the governor. Pollman was at liberty on parole. He was convicted of forgery in connection with the failure of the La Cygne, Kan., bank.

On December 18, 1924, the affidavit states, Glenn A. Davis went to the governor's office in Topeka and asked for a pardon.

"What are you going to do for me?" the governor is quoted as asking.

Executive Hard-Up.—"I replied," Glenn Davis' statement asserts, "that I couldn't do anything at all; that I didn't have an amount of money except my monthly check of $100."

"The governor told me he was hard up, that Kansas was a worse fix than I was," the affidavit continues. "He said one favor calls for another and he told me he thought maybe I would do a little something for him."

"I told him I was sorry—that he should have told me a year ago when I was up for parole and had plenty of money."

"He asked me again if I was sure I did not have any money. I said no; that I didn't have the governor's mansion and I bade him good night."

The following morning, according to Glenn A. Davis, the governor told him he thought he could depend upon him for money. When Glenn Davis insisted upon a pardon, the applicant was requested to obtain a letter from the board of administration, and this he says he did. The letter, he states, recommended a pardon.

Letter Was Ignored.—When he presented the letter to the governor, Davis avers that the governor tossed it aside and said that he had decided to adhere to his original intention. Davis declares he still insisted upon a pardon and that in the course of ensuing conversation the governor referred to Pollman.

"He said Pollman had made the statement that he had everything fixed for a pardon but that he was out of luck," Glenn A. Davis' affidavit resumes.

"He told me he would like to have me go to Kansas City and tell Pollman that. I told him I would go and asked him what sort of message he wanted me to deliver to Pollman."

"The governor told me to advise Pollman to employ 'one of my agents' if he wanted anything done. I asked him who his agents were and how much money it would take and that I wanted to be sure to recommend the best agent. He told me that Pollman would take about $12,500 down to his farm and employ his boy that he would get what he wanted, as he paid a great deal of attention to what his boy said. He also said that if Pollman did not like the boy, he might look at my case in a different light. The governor advised me to be careful of the way I talked to Pollman."

Trap Was Planned.—The affidavit then asserts that he decided to tell Pollman the exact facts. He failed to get in touch with Pollman on his arrival in Kansas City, Davis says, and telephoned to Ben C. Johnson, whom he had known as an officer at the penitentiary at Lansing, Mich., to Johnson's home, Davis stated, and communicated his mission to Johnson. He later got in touch with Pollman and all three went to Pollman's room, where Davis gave Pollman the governor's message, the affidavit states.

"The next day," continues the affidavit, "Pollman told me to go back to Governor Davis and tell him I had not found Pollman, and asked me to write a letter telling what the governor said."

On that day, December 20, 1924, he went back to Topeka, Davis asserts, adding that the governor seemed to be disappointed.

"I went to Hutchinson," the affidavit continues, "There on December 21, 1924, Johnson and Walter G. Heren, a reporter for The Journal-Post, visited me. I promised Pollman and Johnson that I would write a letter to the governor, telling him I had seen the friend he wished me to see and had conveyed his message."

That letter was written Christmas day, December 25, 1924."

POLLMAN DENIES POLITICAL FRAME-UP.

Kansas City, Mo., January 10.—Fred W. Pollman, who is alleged to have given Russell G. Davis a $1,250 bribe to obtain a pardon from Davis' father, Governor Jonathan Davis, of Kansas, is quoted in a story copyrighted by The Kansas City Journal, as denying the governor's statement that the expose was a political "frame-up."

"The governor and I are agreed," Pollman is quoted as saying. "We are in accord about its being a frame-up. The governor suggests he was framed. I can't agree with that. I was the victim, not the governor."

"I relied on Governor Davis to give me a pardon so I could return to business life," Pollman declared. "I felt I deserved a pardon. When the matter of 'employing' Russell Davis, the governor's son, was suggested by the governor himself, I was doubly sorry that I had misjudged Governor Davis, whom I had known for years."

"I wish to make it plain that nobody inveigled Russell Davis into taking money."

"Three times," he added, "I negotiated with Russell Davis. I gave him every opportunity to back out of the plot."

Pollman denies having accused the governor of having accepted money for Glenn A. Davis' parole.

AMIDON IGNORANT OF NIXON HOME TRANSFER.

Wichita, Kan., January 10.—Colonel S. B. Amidon, attorney for W. A. Nixon, pardoned by Governor J. M. Davis after serving two years of a life term for the murder of a woman, said today that he knew nothing about the alleged deed of the Nixon home by Mrs. Nixon in November, last year, to R. C. Gates, in order to procure money for her husband's release.

"I was paid a reasonable fee, a very reasonable fee, to get the doctor out," said Mr. Amidon. "I know nothing of how the money was obtained."

Mr. Amidon is democratic national committeeman for Kansas.

GOVERNOR DAVIS GRANTS ANOTHER PARDON.

Topeka, Kan., January 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—An unconditional pardon was granted late today by Governor J. M. Davis to Mrs. Mary K. Eggleston, of Larned, recently convicted of plotting to poison her aged sister, Dave Ely. Mrs. Eggleston was sentenced to serve an indeterminate term of 2 to 20 years in the state penitentiary. She has been at liberty on bond, however, pending hearing of an appeal by the supreme court.

ONE MAN KILLED ONE WOUNDED IN PISTOL DUEL

Bismarck, S. D., January 10.—One man was dead and another critically injured today as a result of a pistol duel between the two on the streets here last night.

A quarrel over a baby, child of H. H. Parrott, the dead man, is said to have been the cause of the shooting. Meeting his brother-in-law, Dr. J. P. Shaw, late night, Parrott accused him of stealing the child. In the duel which followed almost immediately, Shaw received three bullet wounds in the body. Parrott died with five bullets in his body.

Parrott and his wife separated two months ago, the wife keeping the child. The father is alleged to have stolen the child several weeks later, keeping it until yesterday when it disappeared.

FRANCE TO PROSECUTE IBANEZ FOR PAMPHLET

Paris, January 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Vicente Blasco Ibanez will be prosecuted in France for his recent pamphlet against King Alfonso, of Spain, on the charge of an offense against a foreign sovereign. Conviction of such offense would render him liable to imprisonment from one month to one year. The minister of justice today instructed the public prosecutor to begin proceedings against the Spanish author on the charge of "outrage" to the king. The publisher of the booklet also is to be prosecuted.

The proceedings were instituted at the request of the Spanish embassy, submitted to the French government.

IBANEZ SURPRISED AT LEGAL PROCEEDINGS.

Mentone, France, January 10.—Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the Spanish author, was greatly surprised today when he learned that proceedings had been started against him in the French courts for alleged defamation of a foreign sovereign. The proceedings, it was understood, are based on Ibanez's recent pamphlet attacking King Alfonso of Spain.

The author has arranged for himself and counsel to appear in Paris Tuesday for examination.

The law under which the present prosecution was commenced, the author's lawyers said, has been applied only once previously and that was when the late poet, Laurence Binyon, wrote an article at the time Czar Nicholas came to France, urging the railroad men to wreck the Russian ruler's train. The poet served six months in jail.

Rosken To Face Perjury Charge If Story Falters

New York, January 10.—George Rosken, the 26-year-old chauffeur who yesterday told a grand jury that for 10 years he had conducted a "school for ballot fixers," faces perjury charges if he doesn't prove his assertions, Ferdinand Pecora, chief assistant district attorney, said today.

Mr. Pecora asserted that if Rosken's remarkable tale, which included the charge that last November he had illegally brought about the reelection of Congressman Nathan D. Perlman, republican, over Dr. William L. Stierich, his democratic opponent, is not substantiated an indictment charging him with perjury will be sought. Rosken, who said he accomplished his feat by changing through the use of a "magic ring" in which a cleverly concealed bit of lead was employed, will have an opportunity to continue his recital before the grand jury Monday.

Dr. Stierich, to whom Rosken first made his confession in the form of a sworn affidavit, produced a number of witnesses at the district attorney's office today. They, too, will be called before the grand jurors.

Anti-Unificationists Open Offices in Atlanta Monday; Assail Plan as "Pet Scheme"

Judge Candler Hits Inconsistency of Opponents and Challenges Them to Cite Weaknesses

Branding the proposed plan of unification of the northern and southern churches as the "pet plan" of Judge John S. Candler, Dr. W. L. Pierce Saturday announced that the "Association to Preserve the Methodist Episcopal Church South" will open southern headquarters in the Cathedral building Monday. Dr. Pierce and Rev. G. M. Eakes, pastor of the First Methodist church of Decatur, will be in charge of the office.

Bishop W. A. Candler, brother of Judge Candler, was elected head of the anti-unification body for the entire south at an organization meeting held Thursday at the Piedmont hotel, Candler's position.

Judge Candler, who has been named head of the North Georgia conference branch of an association known as "Friends of Unification," declared that any prediction of the outcome of the voting at present is merely conjecture, but added that if the opposition admits that two-thirds of the members of the southern branch of the church are in favor of the plan—as it did in session Friday—there is every reason to believe that it will be carried.

"I wish that all personalities would be forgotten in this discussion," Judge Candler declared. "I have the highest respect for the gentlemen of the opposition, but they are not to be studied as much, I believe, as any man in the south, and have a full knowledge of the plan."

Pierce Scores Plan. Dr. Pierce predicts that the hopefulness of Judge Candler will turn to despair when voting on the measure begins about March 1.

The statement issued by Dr. Pierce in answer to that made by Judge Candler in The Constitution Friday follows: "Judge Candler is very confident his 'pet plan' is not defeated, but he will grow less confident every day as he hears of the opposition. Several of his associate advocates of this bad scheme, who are in better position than he to know the facts, are privately confessing that their 'plan' is already defeated.

"Reports made to the large and enthusiastic meeting of representative men, who assembled in Atlanta on the 8th of January, were not guesses or anything like a politician's boast of results before an election; but they were careful and exact reports of the facts as they now stand. Those facts show the plan is defeated, and that the number of those who oppose it increases daily. The more it is studied the stronger grows the opposition.

Business Religion Different. "The argument of the judge that northern and southern Methodist churches should unite because northern and southern people are friendly, and engage harmoniously in business, is rather weak. Business to make money and churches to maintain principles are quite different. A Methodist and a Jew may be partners, but the Methodist will not unite with the synagogue, nor the Jew with the Methodist church.

"Most men are friendly with their competitors in the business world, but they do this without entering the same firm or corporation. It is said 'competition is the life of trade.' Certainly Methodism in the United States has grown more rapidly with two warring organizations than it could with one."

Candler Answers Back. "Opponents of the plan have not pointed out a single weakness, but say it is weak," Judge Candler said. "We are not dealing in abstracts. The plan is concrete, it has been published and we wish to be shown the disaster that awaits the south in its adoption."

"The Methodist church has preached 'carry your religion into your business' for the past score of years, and yet opponents of the unification scheme say that we can have harmonious relations in business but not in religion—never. How inconsistent!

"We do not favor joining the northern Methodist church, but rather uniting with an organization that stands for the same things we do. We will not surrender any more than the northern branch, but we will have 4,000,000 members, with more power in connectional affairs of the church than the southern church, a total membership of about 2,500,000. Why, the national body cannot even dismiss for lunch if the southern members say it is not proper. That's how we will surrender the Southern Methodist church."

Social Status Unchanged. "There will be no change in the social status of the southern church. Leaders of the opposition admit that Negro churches will continue as they are at present, under the leadership of their own race. We will not be 'compelled' to bestir them or have them in our midst, and the national body cannot rule that we shall. We have the same power in the general conference of the two churches that they have."

"If the southern church means unselfish service in the interest of mankind, then I do not see how it can fail to ratify the amendment and unite with the northern church for a greater service. I am for it. I helped form the plan, and I was instrumental in protecting rights southerners regard as sacred."

"It will take a three-fourths vote of all members of the southern church

Great Leviathan Too Fast For Gamblers, Says Captain

Captain H. Hartley Is in Atlanta Visiting Friends. Boosts European Trips for War Veterans.

BY KENNETH L. EAGON.

Captain H. Hartley, commander of the Leviathan, the "Twentieth Century" of the sea—the fastest liner that ever stopped—will visit the high-water society—says master crooks and confidence men and card sharks have deserted the Leviathan, because they "can't stand the pace."

The Leviathan is too fast for them, captain told the writer at the Biltmore hotel Saturday, where he will sojourn for the next three days while visiting friends in Atlanta.

Next Tuesday, Captain Hartley is going to Alabama and will spend the next month visiting friends in various cities and towns in Dixie.

"Dixie gives me the relaxation and entertainment that makes life worth living," said Captain Hartley, himself a Yankee. "I love all the southerners. They make you feel at home at once and they have everything down here that makes for an ideal vacation, plenty of rest, entertainment, and best of all, the best cooking on land or sea."

Reverting to the subject of big card games at sea, at some sittings of which representatives of the underworld have been known to have lost millions of dollars, Captain Hartley declared:

"We're too fast for those boys, and they're too fast for us. They're picking on smaller and slower liners. Why, we make the trip to England in less than five days, and it takes the fastest of them a week to get to the world almost that length of time. I spread my lay and set the scenery for 'em. If any confidence men, or crooks, or gamblers, get in a job on my ship, they're out of luck. I stuff them down to a creek where they can walk in and walk out with the booty. And I don't believe it can be done any other way."

Officers of the Atlanta association are L. C. Adler, of Atlanta, president; V. S. Thorpe, of Macon, vice president; W. C. Falk, of Savannah, vice president; M. D. Eisman, of Atlanta, secretary and treasurer.

Chicago Capitalists Visit Brooks County; New Road Rumored

Quitman, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—A party of forty prominent capitalists and railroad men of Chicago inspected Brooks county farms of cotton, and it is rumored that their visit may mean the possible development of a railroad through this section to the Florida west coast.

The party, which included several of the nation's leading financiers, were here last night, after which they went to Adel and boarded a special Southern railway train for Chicago.

Sweet Potatoes Proves Money Crop In Brooks County

Quitman, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—Sweet potatoes have proven one of the best money crops here the past season and the price is now up to $1 to $1.10 a bushel. It is estimated that only 30 to 40 carloads remain in the curing bins in the county, and potatoes, once so plentiful, are difficult to obtain on the local market.

They have been shipped steadily in carload lots all the winter.

TWIGGS ASSOCIATION GIVES FARMERS AID

Jeffersville, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—Plans are actively begun by Twigg's County association for an extensive advertising campaign. The farmers desiring to purchase fertilizer are giving their tonnage wanted to the secretary, who will get best prices from the fertilizer manufacturers and purchase cooperatively. This move means a saving of thousands of dollars.

Produce either to be bought or sold will be handled through the same channels. The people of Twigg's are working with one aim, and that is to encourage diversification and get away from the one-crop system.

Two prospectors for farm land have been in the county for this week, and they are looking for land that is expected to be purchased from the United States government. Others are coming next week and results are showing up already from a concerted attack of the wide-awake members of the Twigg's county association.

ALLEN SANITARIUM NEW STATION NAME

Millersville, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—Central of Georgia railroad will erect a depot at Carling, changing the name to Allen Sanitarium. The plans call for a modern building to accommodate persons coming to Allen's invalid home, on account of inadequate facilities, have been retained to get off the train at Millersville, several miles away.

TWO POLICEMEN URGED AT MACON

Macon, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—Mrs. Charles C. Harrold has been elected temporary president of the Macon League of Women Voters to succeed Mrs. J. N. Talley, resigned. Miss Eunice Perkins is recording secretary.

McRae, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—In order to encourage tobacco growing this year in Telfair county, the Helena Chamber of Commerce is offering free seed of the best varieties of bright leaf tobacco.

Only small acreage heretofore in Telfair has been planted, but both soil and climate seem favorable to its production.

SUCCESSFUL HOG SALE IS HELD AT M'RAE

McRae, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—A hog sale here yesterday, conducted by County Agent Edwards and W. F. Whaley resulted in the sale of three car loads. No. 1's brought $9.25 per hundred, No. 2's $8.75, No. 3's $7.75, No. 4's $7.25.

Hall Commission company, of Moultrie, was the successful bidder.

CAPTAIN H. HARTLEY.

World war have a strong desire to make a trip to Europe," Captain Hartley told the writer. "The gold-stripe men wish to revisit the familiar and oft-remembered scenes of 1917-19. And 'silver-stripe' men naturally want to see those places where their brother soldiers were overseas made history."

"Now it is possible for practically every veteran and student to make a comprehensive tour of France and the battlefields at a minimum cost, and I mean by students, the students of everything, from everywhere. The term 'students' is broad, as applied by our company and the Leviathan, and the highest price for a trip to Europe is usually the steamship fare. These fares, for veterans and students, have been cut to almost nothing."

Four Tours Planned. "There are four distinct tours planned for the year 1925, besides an endless number of special tours. The United States lines have established a special bureau in Paris, at 11 Rue Serbie, to supervise and direct the veterans' tours. The personal service that will be rendered by this bureau is comparable in value to the highest price for a personally-conducted tour. Veterans will be taken by buses for tours of the battlefields. The Leviathan owners, aiming to keep the cost of these tours as low as possible, have arranged with the government of the United States and the government of France so that neither passports nor visas will be required for veterans."

The Leviathan's veteran and student tours have been endorsed by such leading ex-service men as Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, Major David A. Reed, United States senator from Pennsylvania; General James G. Harbord, and others.

Congressmen Not Bad Lot, Says 'Aunt' Alice Robertson

Muskogee, Okla., January 10.—Revelations of drinking and other indiscretions by congressmen when in Washington, as contained in the divorce trial of Representative Scott of Michigan, have been no surprise to Miss Alice Robertson. She herself observed the same things.

But Miss Robertson, who is 71 years old and was the second woman ever to be elected to congress, doesn't believe in the reputation of a bad lot. She admits that she sometimes noticed liquor on congressional breaths, that once she saw a congressman in a saloon, and that she often attended functions where liquor flowed freely, but she asserts that bad conduct is to be blamed for lack of respect.

Find What You Look For. All these secrets of official "iniquity" were forced upon Miss Robertson by the divorce trial of Representative Scott. She said she had been looking for it. "You always find what you look for," she declared in answer to the question of the United States News.

Miss Robertson had no intimate acquaintance with Congressman Scott, but the details of his divorce case in Oklahoma. But, like a seer, she also observed that "his residence in Washington was at a hotel entirely too expensive for the means of a congressman."

"But I resent the attacks on our congressmen," she said Wednesday. "There are some who come there to do wrong things, but that is not the fault of the whole body."

Saw One Drunk on Floor. "While in congress," Miss Robertson continued, warning that she would have been much more had she been on the lookout for it. "You always find what you look for," she declared in answer to the question of the United States News.

Miss Robertson had no intimate acquaintance with Congressman Scott, but the details of his divorce case in Oklahoma. But, like a seer, she also observed that "his residence in Washington was at a hotel entirely too expensive for the means of a congressman."

SECOND ARREST IN KENNEDY KILLING

J. A. Kennedy, 35, of near Carrollton, was arrested Saturday afternoon on charges of murder in connection with the fatal cutting on January 3 of D. O. Thraikill, of 376 1-2 Decatur street. Len Miller, held since the killing, is said by police to have implicated Kennedy. Both are charged with murder.

Kennedy was nabbed as he attempted to cash a draft on his account in Carrollton. He denied all connection with the slaying.

Thraikill's throat was cut from ear to ear in his own home, his young wife witnessing the tragedy. According to the statement of the wife, Thraikill was called into the hall of the home by the two men. A scuffle ensued in which Thraikill was fatally slashed. He died soon afterwards at Grady hospital.

Officers have searched for Kennedy in connection with the killing since the night of the crime. They did not know the name of the man for whom they searched, until he was arrested Saturday afternoon.

Since conviction the men have been kept in the Augusta jail.

4 MEXICAN COLUMNS HUNT BANDIT-SLAYERS

Mexico City, January 10.—(By the Associated Press.)—Four military columns today are pursuing the bandits who murdered William Hinzpeter at the San Bartolo ranch, three miles from Puebla City, last Tuesday evening.

Hinzpeter, a German, was a prominent merchant and agriculturist. Press dispatches stated that the crime was instigated by enemies of the local government who hoped to create an international difficulty. General Cruz is reported to have declared that the murderers have been identified as Indian inhabitants. The commander of one of the pursuing columns reported that he had pursued the slayers as far as the mountain village of San Miguel, where he lost their track.

The German consul at Puebla has made representations to the government demanding the punishment of the criminals. Unconfirmed press dispatches from San Martin report that another German has been killed on the ranch near Texmacan, formerly owned by Mrs. Rosalie Evans, the widow of a British subject who was murdered five months ago.

Reports give the name of the slain man as John Strauss. Strauss was Mrs. Evans' ranch manager and was riding with her in the buggy when she was shot and killed. He himself was wounded.

Late reports from Puebla state that only Hinzpeter was killed by the bandits, his young son, aged 12, having himself been in the slayers. Mrs. Hinzpeter was in Puebla. A post mortem investigation revealed that the murderers had used Mauser rifles.

Old-Time Feuds Do Not Disturb Peace of Pacific

Chicago, January 10.—It is fortunate that there are no inherited feuds in Europe between the Pacific countries, the Rev. Dr. Albert W. Palmer, of Oak Park, Ill., formerly of California and Hawaii, told the Chicago council on foreign relations today.

"While I served there," she concluded with a smile, "I was so engrossed in the business of my office that I did not particularly notice the imperialism of that life of the city."

"You always find what you look for."

YOUNG MEN TO FACE SERIOUS CHARGES

Dublin, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—Two young white men, Clarence Howell and Leo Hill, both of the Cedar Grove community, in the extreme lower end of Laurens county, are being held in jail here on charges of attempted assault on two girls of the Cedar Grove settlement, early last week.

Howell, who gave his age as 25, is said to be a unmarried, while Hill, who is 21, is unmarried.

Details of the affair are lacking here, partly through suppression on the part of all parties connected with the alleged attack attempt, and partly on account of limited means of communication with the Cedar Grove section, which is more than 20 miles south of this city.

The young men are being held with out bail pending the coming session of Laurens superior court.

American Express Leader In Atlanta for Few Hours

President of Great Organization Will Return Monday To Be Banquet Guest of Robert C. Alston.

R. E. M. Cowie, president of American Railway Express company, spent a few hours in Atlanta Saturday. He left for Birmingham in the afternoon, where he will remain over Sunday, returning to Atlanta Monday as the guest of Robert C. Alston, prominent attorney of this city and representative of the express company in this division. Mr. Alston Monday will give a banquet in Mr. Cowie's honor at the Piedmont Driving club.

Mr. Cowie came to America from Scotland in 1880.

"When he had bought a railroad ticket from Boston to Cleveland, he had only $5 left. He began work with the American Express company as an office boy. He is now head of an express business which employs 150,000 men and maintains 28,500 offices in the United States. Three years after entering the service of the American Express company in Cleveland, Ohio, he became secretary to the general superintendent of the southwestern division. In 1890 he was appointed to a similar position in the office of the general manager of the company at Chicago. He then became assistant to the vice president and general manager of the company.

In 1903 he became assistant general manager of the western department, with headquarters at Chicago. In 1910 he was appointed manager of the Pacific department, with headquarters at Salt Lake City. While serving in this capacity his headquarters were changed to Denver, and to Los Angeles.

In January, 1915, Mr. Cowie became vice president and general manager with headquarters in New York, in charge of the eastern lines of the American Express company.

In 1918, when the American Railway Express company was formed, as a result of the business of the old companies under railroad administration, he was elected operating vice president in the east, with headquarters in New York city.

In 1921 Mr. Cowie became president of the American Railway Express company, the largest express organization in the world.

McCord Resigns Leadership Of Children's Home Society

Robert B. McCord, state superintendent of the Georgia Children's Home society, with headquarters in Atlanta, announced Saturday that he would resign from his connection with that organization at the board meeting to be held at the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce next Wednesday afternoon. Besides Atlanta headquarters, the society has branches in of along with the Georgia Children's Home society, which had a large part in founding and successfully promoting it. It has grown from small beginnings until today it is perhaps the largest state-wide social service organization in the state, with more than 12,000 supporters outside of Atlanta.

"This was only a proposed vote for children when I took it up as its executive and financial head on first of March, 1912, on the invitation of its newly formed board of directors," Mr. McCord said. "I had just finished at the University of Chicago in the departments of sociology and political economy and was ready to tackle something for the new best children of my home state. Since then we have helped thousands of stranded little fellows, and have taken permanent legal responsibility of some thirteen hundred who were homeless and without competent relatives."

"We have not laid out large sums in buildings and grounds, but we have utilized the childless private homes of the state and have a very adequate receiving home at Ormewood Court for temporary care. This job appeared to me at once as first of all a money-raising job, for nothing could be done without it."

"For several years now the income has been upwards of fifty thousand dollars, and the work has grown larger and more efficient. We competitive and former contributors, and it was a success."

"But now with the advent of the money-raising becomes less important and the work of dealing with the children of the state and in my present plan is to apply the experience I have gained with direct mail advertising to building up business here in Atlanta and in other cities of the state by the same method."

The principles are the same though the operation is different. I perhaps open my own office in Atlanta.

"I shall be greatly pleased if those who have helped me make care of these thousands of children continue to stand by the organization and make the work larger and more efficient in its service to the handicapped children of the state and in the city of Atlanta and in other cities of the state by the same method."

quartets, at Ormewood Court, the society has offices in Augusta, Macon and Savannah, with district superintendents stationed in those cities.

This announcement of Mr. McCord will come as a surprise to the society's friends and supporters throughout the state, for he has been for thirteen years thought of as a money-raiser.

NEWS OF THE RADIO WORLD

Boycott Is Contemplated To Curb 'Menace of Radio' By Actors and Dramatists

Equity Association Heads Alarmed Since Opera Stars Make Hit With Radio Fans of Nation.

New York, January 10.—Alarmed by what they are pleased to term "the menace of the radio," theatrical managers, actors and dramatists are preparing to make a united stand against the threatened encroachment. The seriousness of the competition of the radio apparently did not impress the theatrical industry until John McCormack and Lucezia Bori, operatic stars, broadcast a concert last week. The possibilities of the radio as an entertainment agency now appear so limitless that the impresarios are greatly worried.

When the Actors' Equity association meets on January 25 a plan of action will be outlined. For the first time in its history, Equity, the actors' union, has invited the managers to be present and take part in its discussion. Only one course is open to the amusement managers and that is in all probability, will be followed. A rigid boycott against theatrical entertainers performing for the radio is foreshadowed. Unless the movement gains more momentum than it has thus far the action of the theatrical profession will not affect the plans, already inaugurated, of regular radio concerts by leading operatic and concert stars.

It is noteworthy in this connection that the Metropolitan Opera house reported increased demand for tickets after McCormack and Bori had broadcast for the radio last week. And, as McCormack and Bori were more largely attended than ever in his radio broadcasts. This fact is unconvincing to the theatrical managers, who say that the radio and the popular cabaret places in New York are emptying the theaters.

The theatrical people hope to keep their performers off the radio and if they succeed, of course, radio programs are bound to suffer to some extent. John Golden, one of the most active theatrical producers in New York, disagrees with other producers and maintains that the radio does not prove a detriment to the theater. He believes this so strongly that he intends to use the Little Theater to broadcast news relating to his own productions and others. He is interested in equipping the theater for radio. It is his belief that to make use of the radio, instead of fighting it, will be able to stimulate interest in theatrical productions and make playgoers out of those radio fans who now stay at home. "The talking machine admitted," he said, "is a political policy. If you can't lick 'em, join 'em."

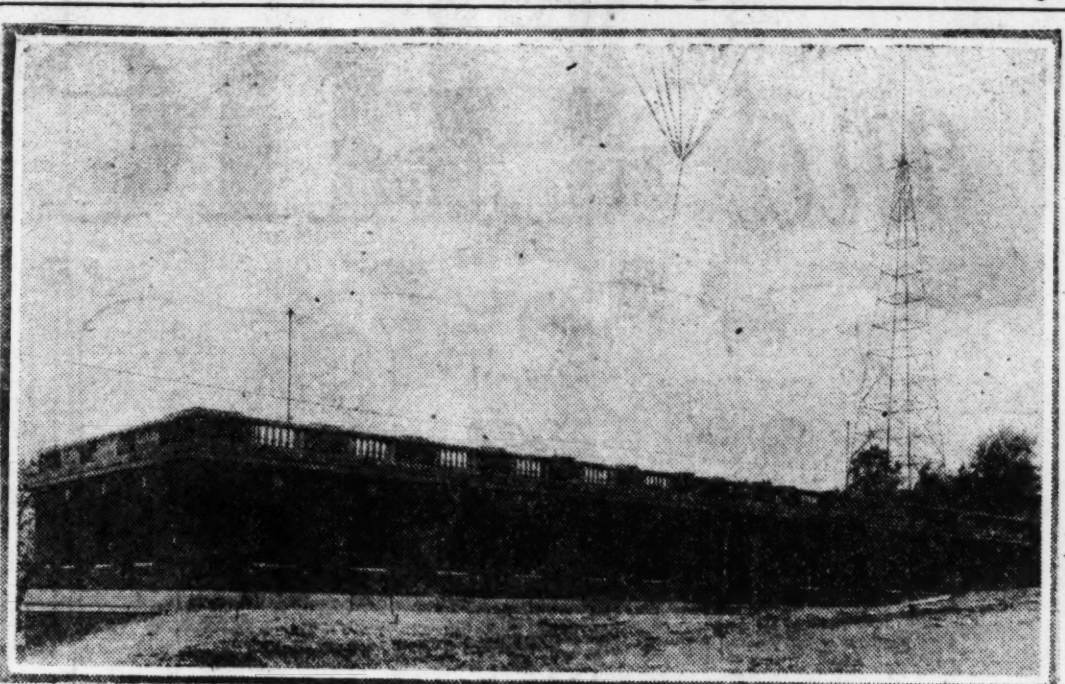

METROPOLITAN STARS SING FOR LISTENERS.
Following the successful appearance of John McCormack and Lucezia Bori at WEAF on New Year's day, a similar program is to be given that station by Frances Alda, Metropolitan star, on Friday, January 16. Other special music will be arranged for the program, which will be broadcast simultaneously from a large chain of stations. The program ought to be heard by listeners in the entire eastern portion of the country.

NEW YORK HOTEL OPENS BIG STATION.
The seventeenth New York broadcasting station is now testing and is soon to open at the Hotel McAlpin in this city. Plans are being kept secret until a broadcasting call has been assigned by the government.

RADIO EXPANSION PLANNED BY NAVY.
A far-reaching expansion of the naval radio system is in contemplation. The navy is planning a perfect system of radio communication, both afloat and ashore, and it will take several years to complete it. The cost will run into many millions of dollars.

RADIO EDUCATION VALUE IS STRESSED.
The practical value of education by radio is demonstrated by the experience of the New York university. "Air College." Announcement of the spring term of this "college" has just

Government Will Test Effect of Eclipse On Radio Activities at Big Laboratory

The radio laboratory in this picture is operated by the Bureau of Standards in Washington and will be the scene of tests on January 24 to test the effect of the total eclipse of the sun on that day on radio transmission and reception.

Listeners Throughout Nation Invited To Join in Tests To Further Radio Perfection.

BY THOMAS STEVENSON.
Washington, January 10.—(Special.)—Radio fans are invited to listen during the period of the solar eclipse between 8 and 10 a. m. eastern standard time, on January 24, and report to the bureau of standards its effect on reception.

The effects of the eclipse on radio transmission and reception will be closely watched by experts at the bureau of standards and at a number of laboratories all over the country. Four stations (WJZ, Springfield, Mass.; WEAF, New York; WGY, Schenectady, and WGR, Buffalo), which will be in the path of the total eclipse, will transmit special signals for observation purposes.

These special signals will be transmitted between 7:30 and 11 a. m. on five days, from the 23d to 27th, inclusive, for test purposes. In other words, the signals on the 24th during the eclipse will be checked and compared with those on the other four days.

Experts to Aid Tests.
It is hoped by experts that the tests during the eclipse will lay the foundation for a concentrated and intense study of fading, interference and other atmospheric disturbances which affect radio transmission and reception, with a view of perfecting apparatus to overcome these conditions. Credit for initiating the movement to observe radio signals during the eclipse is given to Dr. G. W. Pickens, chief engineer of the Bureau of Standards Radio Laboratory. Dr. Dellinger, chief of the Bureau of Standards Radio Laboratory, Dr. Dellinger and his staff are cooperating to the fullest in this work and consider it of high value.

In this connection, Dr. Dellinger has sent a letter to the American Radio Association's contest, "Who is to Pay for Broadcasting and How?" The winning plan calls for the public to pay for broadcasting by means of a tax on each vacuum tube and crystal bought by the consumer. It is pointed out that radio broadcasting, to be placed on a sound economic basis, must pay its way as do other forms of entertainment; that to obtain the best that radio can offer costs for broadcasting entertainment on a paid, contract basis.

UNIQUE COOPERATION BROADCAST TESTED.
WDAF, cooperating with the Kansas City Telephone company, has inaugurated a plan by which listeners throughout the country may call a broadcasting station on the telephone and while the conversation is carried on with the announcer, the voices are broadcast. Calls have been received from New York and San Francisco.

ANOTHER PRIZE FEATURE "IN AIR."
On Wednesday evening, WJZ broadcast the first of a series of weekly question contests, in which listeners competed for a prize of $50. Fifty questions, based upon the news of the week, are to be asked each Wednesday, five seconds being allowed after the question for the listener to write the answer down.

3 RADIO PATENTS GRANTED IN WEEK

Washington, January 10.—(Special.)—Three patents on radio inventions were granted by the U. S. patent office during the past week. A brief description of each of these inventions follows:

Radio Game (1,520,082), invented by Commander William R. Purnell, U. S. Navy. The radio game is an invention of the order of tidewater. A four wire antenna, mounted on small stands is provided with clips having hooks on them. The clips are tossed, or snapped, with the object being to hook them to the antenna. Each wire of the antenna has a certain value and a clip hooked on it gives a certain score to the player.

Variable Condenser (1,520,320), invented by C. S. Cherpeck, of Chicago, Ill. One of the main objects of this invention is the provision of a variable condenser especially adapted for radio work, provided with means whereby the capacity of the same may be varied through quite a wide range, and which variation shall be manually controlled so as to enable the operator to make very delicate adjustments for proper tuning and variation of wave lengths.

Condenser and Holder Thereof (1,520,027), invented by A. Atwater Kent, of Ardmore, Pa., and assigned to the Atwater Kent Manufacturing company. This invention provides a condenser unit or structure having terminal strips communicating with the different armatures or plates of the condenser and extending longitudinally of the unit exteriorly thereto and then transversely.

RADIO BUGABOO BEGINS NEW YEAR WITH BIG FLURRY

Radio has entered the new year with one of its biggest problems still unsolved—how to eliminate interference from radiating receiving sets.

George Washington was the father of his country and Abraham Lincoln saved it. Many men appropriately have been referred to as the Washington of radio; the man who can suggest how to eliminate interference from receiving sets will be the Lincoln of radio.

Thousands of radio users do not require any special tests to inform them about the devilishness of radiation from oscillating receivers, but they, in common with all radio fans, will be interested in the unique tests recently conducted by The Cleveland Plain Dealer over Station WTAM in Cleveland, Ohio, as a part of the interference survey undertaken in cooperation with the Cleveland Radio association.

Squeals started deliberately in Cleveland for test purposes were heard over one-quarter of the American continent. They were picked up clear to the Atlantic coast, and as far southwest as Texas.

Even after Harry A. Mount and Deane S. Kintner, of The Plain Dealer's staff, had eliminated the reports of persons who, in addition to their regular radio equipment, had used "two stages of imagination," the authentic reports clearly established the tremendous area over which radiating receivers send interference.

Jud Tunkins says his community has lost interest in saving daylight and is now trying to cut out the moonshine.

CONCERT AUDIENCES HEARD BY MILLIONS

It was thought remarkable when Jenny Lind packed Castle Garden or Melba packed Madison Square Garden, or Caruso packed the Metropolitan Opera house, when the voice of a concert artist was heard in New York or London has been six to eight thousand at the outside, the radio audience which has been listening to Bori and John McCormack and other phonograph stars are said to exceed six to eight million. Theater owners and concert managers are said to be viewing the radio with apprehension.

NEW REGULATIONS GIVEN AMATEURS

Washington, D. C., January 10. (Special.)—In amateur regulations promulgated by Judge S. B. Davis, acting secretary of commerce, the following wave lengths are allocated to amateur stations: 150 to 200 meters, 75 to 35.7 meters, 37.5 to 42.8 meters, 18.7 to 21.1 meters, and 4.8 to 5.35 meters. The privilege of using wave lengths from 105 to 110 meters is withdrawn.

Amateurs are urged to abandon spark transmitters. Until such change is made they will be permitted in the wave length band between 170 and 180 meters and should have a maximum power not exceeding one-tenth. Phone and ICW (interrupted continuous wave) transmitters will be permitted in the band from 170 to 180 meters. CW (continuous wave) transmitters will be permitted in all of the bands allocated for amateur use.

Amateur stations must use circuits loosely coupled to the radiating system, or devices that will produce the equivalent effects to minimize key impacts, harmonics and plate supply modulations excepting in cases where loops are used as radiators. Conductive coupling, even though loose, will not be permitted.

No Power Restrictions.
No restrictions will be imposed relative to the character of power supply provided the emitted wave is sharply defined. Amateur stations when using wave lengths between 150 and 200 meters are required to observe a silent period from 8 to 10:30 p. m. standard time, and on Sunday while church services are being broadcast. Such stations when using wave lengths below 85 meters and having a pure, continuous wave or where a full wave rectification is employed, are not required to observe a silent period, provided no interference is caused other services.

Licensees Issued for Amateur Stations will authorize the use of any or all of the wave lengths allocated for amateur use, provided the transmitter meets the requirements of the regulations. No alterations in the apparatus will be permitted which result in changing the character of the emitted wave, except under authority granted by the superior of radio.

GENERAL AFRAID OF RADIO "GRIP" HE TELLS PUBLIC

Washington, January 10.—(Special.)—General Herbert M. Lord, director of the budget bureau, is one of the busiest men in Washington. His task is to make government expenses to the absolute minimum in order that taxes may be correspondingly decreased. General Lord believes radio is the greatest invention of the age, yet he says he could not be paid to have a radio set.

"I'm afraid of it," he declared. "A friend of mine is worse about radio than some people are about gonorrhea. He has been trying to persuade me to get a set. He tells me that he can put me in a good set for $40. I tell him that I would let him put a set in for me for $40."

"If I got a radio set I'd sit up nearly all night working on it. I'm afraid I'd be just as bad if not worse than my friend. It would take up too much of my time and I cannot afford to take a chance on it."

"Radio is a wonderful thing, no doubt about that. Why, only the other day my friend was telling me he got England on his set."

"Oh, that isn't anything," the general said. "I was joking with my set the other night and I got Chicago."

"You'd better read the papers," the general retorted. "You ought to know that a man got killed for pulling that."

Short Wave Lengths.
Washington is the first under the wire with a radio auction.

Secretary Hoover is opposed to a collection of a tax by the government on sale or manufacture of radio receiving sets to be applied to the cost of broadcasting national radio programs. However, he favors such programs interconnected over the whole country under one independent direction.

The gross sales of the Radio Corporation of America have been: 1921, $1,468,000; 1922, $11,000,000; 1923, $22,000,000; 1924, $30,000,000.

A canvass has revealed that there are close to 40,000 radio sets in the nation, which is but one portion of New York city.

Radio sets are being sold by grocers in Vienna.

Nothing slow about our neighbor to the north, for Ottawa has just held her second annual radio fair. Toronto dealers report an increasing tendency in Canada to buy sets on time payments.

We are informed that a tuba, a trombone, or a bassoon, will make a good loud speaker, but who has an extra tuba, trombone, or bassoon about the house?

RADIO PROVES AID TO DEAF MOTHER INJURED IN CRASH

Washington, January 10.—(Special.)—Radio has proved a blessing to Mrs. Craig, mother of Donald A. Craig, Washington correspondent for the New York Sun. Up until recently, Mrs. Craig had not heard music for several years because of deafness, and she had difficulty in understanding words shouted into her ears.

Tech Mandolin Club To Appear Monday On WGST Program

Popular Musical Aggregation Will Be Heard Between 9 and 10 O'clock.

Georgia Tech's famous mandolin club will be the feature attraction Monday night from 9 to 10 o'clock on Station WGST, the Tech station. On Thursday night, 7 to 8 o'clock, Mrs. G. E. Cooper, contralto, and Mrs. Slex C. Keese, soprano, will be the leading stars in a musical broadcast.

The Tech station, operated until last Thursday under call letters of WBBF, the south's "old reliable" station, one of the country's first big broadcasters and a pioneer in other entertainment circles in the south.

For many weeks past leading stars in the musical world of Atlanta have appeared before the school station's microphone, and the class and quality of entertainment has drawn favorable comment of thousands of fans in every state in the union.

Tech's "Ramin" Reck band, the glee and mandolin and other musical clubs of the institution, have been heard on numerous occasions, with the result that the Tech station is recognized as one of the leaders in school station circles and thousands tune in regularly on Monday and Thursday nights for the popular Atlant. station.

At her son's home one night, she examined the radio set and put the ear 'phones over her head. To her surprise, she heard perfectly. Since then, she has not ceased marveling at the power of the invention. Strangely enough, the ear with which she can hear best by radio is the ear with which she hears least ordinarily.

Mr. Craig is the only surviving member of the accident which occurred at Denver, Colo., on President Harding's last western trip, when an automobile plunged down a mountain side.

BIG STATIONS JOIN IN 'HOUR OF MUSIC' RADIO PROGRAMS

Move To Foster Love Of Better Music Gets Cooperation of Fans and Listeners of the Nation.

To foster a deeper understanding and appreciation of good music and to emphasize the remarkable musical and educational possibilities of radio, the first national musical memory contest, ever started over radio, will be broadcast from six of the principal radio stations of the country, starting the evening of February 2 during the "Brunswick Hour of Music" at 10 o'clock eastern time and 9 o'clock central standard time.

Every man, woman and child in America is eligible to enter this musical memory contest. In history, the broadcasting of operatic stars, famous symphonies and foremost orchestras will be done from the Brunswick laboratories in New York city every Tuesday evening and relayed through stations WJZ, New York; WGY, Schenectady; WRC, Washington; KDKA, Pittsburgh; KYW, Chicago; KFKX, Hastings, Neb.

Later musical stardom, including opera stars who never have been heard over the radio before, will be sent through the air from the new station KDA at Denver and KGO at Oakland, Cal., so as to reach every radio musical fan from coast to coast. It is expected that 20,000,000 people will take part in this test of musical memory, which aside from its educational value will be stimulated by a competition for the winning of cash prizes, totaling $5,000 monthly.

Re-educating Public.
In the present era of jazz, understanding and appreciation of good music—the works of the great composers—is being lost to a remarkable degree by the younger generation, music critics say, and it is with the idea of re-educating the public in better music, with the assistance of radio, that this national contest is being staged.

It aims also to familiarize all the people with the achievements of the concert and operatic stars of the new hall of fame who have succeeded the Patti, the Gales, Jenny Lind and the Nipperettes of former years. Sweep away by the craze for popular airs, the number of people who can identify the compositions of Beethoven, Chopin, Mendelssohn and Bach are decreasing daily.

Can you hear a piece of music today, one of the great voices of the great composers of the Metropolitan or Chicago operas and tomorrow remember what it is and the name of the singer? Can you identify any of the great marches? These are musical memory tests, and that is what the contest is all about.

That people musically inclined who are not fortunate enough to possess radio outfits may have an opportunity to enter the contest on an equal footing with the owners of radio sets, arrangements have been made to permit the public to "listen in" at any Brunswick headquarters Tuesday evenings that they may be enabled to make their selections as competitors for the prizes to be awarded at the end of each month. Competitors are not to send in their answers until after the final "Brunswick Hour of Music" program each month.

Tuesday Features.
Lists of the musical selections from which the numbers of each Tuesday evening program will be given in advance. These lists may be obtained in any town or city within the radius of the radio stations broadcasting the program.

KITCHENS BROTHERS
MARKETS DAIRY FEED

Security dairy feed, which is distributed exclusively by Kitchens Bros., the widely-known food and feed merchants, has achieved remarkable sales volume. These very gratifying results are attributed to several important factors. To quote an official of the company:

"Dairymen may be misled by the guaranteed analysis in the feed. The dairyman is interested in the amount of digestible nutrients or that part which the cow actually uses. The ingredients making up Security Dairy are all highly digestible and in addition, the grouping of these ingredients of the formula of Security Dairy is such that the digestibility is higher than is apparent when considering each ingredient. Security Dairy will therefore produce results beyond that expected when considering the analysis."

The food nutrients in Security Dairy are so proportioned and are present in such amounts that as a concentrate the cow's needs are met in the most satisfactory manner. The low fiber content of Security Dairy is favorable to a more economical use of coarse roughage than if the fiber content were higher because the cow requires for maximum production a certain bulk in her ration and this can be controlled more economically through the roughage than through the concentrate."

In making Security Dairy a highly concentrated feed an important factor, mechanical condition has been closely observed which gives the mass a light fluffy feel that is loosely held together. The mechanical condition possessed by Security Dairy is favorable to rapid digestion and feed contentment."

M'CLURE CO. QUILTS
RETAIL SELLING

Work is being completed on the interior of the McClure company building, corner of Whitehall, Hunter and Broad streets, preparatory to the occupation of part of this building by an eastern syndicate. It is now generally known that the McClure Five and Ten-Cent company have retired from the retail end and will confine themselves exclusively to wholesale dry goods, notions and allied lines.

McClure company will continue in this well-known location, the one difference being that McClure will no longer operate retail stores.

This departure was decided upon by the McClure company to enable them to devote the entire time of the organization to the wholesale interest which has achieved such proportions that the policy made by the company to better serve their wholesale trade required the elimination of the retail division.

This company will have larger and more varied stocks than ever before and in the plans formulated by C. W. McClure, president of the company, is included a merchandising service that will cover the southern territory.

SUICIDE ATTEMPT
LAID TO ILL HEALTH
BY YOUNG WOMAN

Ill health is blamed as the motive of Mrs. Ola Hammett, 29, of 703 Chestnut street, when she drained a vial filled with poison Friday night, and was rushed to Grady hospital in a critical condition. She will recover, doctors said Saturday, although her condition is reported as serious.

Mrs. Hammett was playing cards with her husband and other members of her family Friday night. She walked back into the rear of the house and the players, unaware of her return, heard a scream and when they rushed to her, found her horribly burned with acid.

On the way to the hospital she begged doctors not to administer antidote, but to let her die. She refused Friday to discuss the motive for her act.

WOODRUFF MACHINERY
CO. ADDS NEW LINES

The Woodruff Machinery Manufacturing company recently moved its offices to 92-94 S. Forsyth street, where they have taken on several new lines. Their new place of business gives them much larger quarters and gives them ample room to take care of their increased business.

The firm distributes in addition to other lines the well-known Farquhar slab burner for saw mills and recently has taken on the agency for the White Hickory wagons.

Albert Woodruff, of this company, it will be recalled, was a candidate last summer for railroad commissioner, polling over 98,000 votes for that office. Mr. Woodruff states that since the election he has been devoting his entire time to the management of his business and the same has been growing by leaps and bounds.

Mr. Woodruff also states that in his recent travels all over Georgia he became convinced that notwithstanding the great uses that the automobile truck is being put to, there are still places in the industrial and agricultural life of the state where the good old-fashioned farm wagons are needed.

With this idea in mind Mr. Woodruff selected the best line of wagons and for cars so that if you live in the city or the woods, you want can quickly be supplied in the wagon line.

W. H. Maddox, a well-known machinery man, has been added to the force in the capacity of assistant sales manager and bookkeeper. Mr. Maddox is well acquainted with the trade, having been connected with several well-known machinery houses in Atlanta for a number of years.

TRUST COMPANY SUES
U. S. TAX COLLECTOR

The Trust Company of Georgia, Savannah, has filed a suit in United States district court here against J. T. Rose, collector of internal revenue for Georgia, in which the company seeks judgment in the sum of $150,794.84.

The sum sought in the suit is alleged to represent additional assessments for income tax in 1919, which the petition alleges were made and collected on March 10, 1924, by Collector Rose.

The assessment was made, the suit sets out, on the claim of the commission of revenue at Washington that the Trust company received Coca-Cola stock of the Delaware company, valued at $40 a share for $5 per share, the claim being that the difference represented compensation for service rendered by the bank in the reorganization of the company.

The bank, according to the suit, claims that the stock was purchased at $5 a share; that it acted for its sole benefit; and that none of it was sold that year, and that, therefore, no profit was realized.

Italian Political Crisis, As Concerning Mussolini, Ends as Tempest in Teapot

No General Election Will Be Held Until 1926, Unless Contingency Arises, Premier Asserts.

BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

Rome, January 10.—Italy's exciting new political crisis this week, which set to boiling again the tumultuous cauldron of internal politics, and which for a time threatened dire consequences, ended today so far as the picturesque leader of Fascism, Premier Mussolini, is concerned, as a tempest in a teapot.

The premier set at rest the spirited and speculative discussion of a possible early general election, with the assertion that none would be held until 1926, unless unusual and unexpected contingencies arose. Thus the week-end finds the political calm as compared with the previous agitation, and a great many leaders, both of the government and the opposition, taking advantage of the springlike weather, are enjoying a rest at the country-side.

Scribes Flock to Rome.

Despite the lull in the political situation, a flock of foreign newspaper correspondents, including many from the United States and England, who poured into Rome from other European capitals to watch the fireworks of this week, refused to be convinced that the "shooting" is over and they are still trying with might and main to interview Mussolini. He, however, irritated by reports of the situation abroad, is undecided whether to grant their requests, and, therefore, it is expected that the correspondents will remain in Rome over Sunday.

The Aventine opposition committee again met today and had an animated discussion which lasted four hours. The committee refused to give the details of the viewpoints taken by the different members, merely issuing a communique saying:

"We have confirmed the policy thus far followed and are satisfied with the perfect accord existing among the various groups of the opposition in appraising the present political situation; also, as to the further development of their future action."

According to The Tribune, the greatest part of the discussion concerned the question of the return of the Aventine deputies to the chamber, but no settlement of the question was reached.

Signor Scialoja, under secretary of public works, today presented his resignation and insisted upon its acceptance, despite efforts made to dissuade him from taking this step. Signor Scialoja explained that his action was not due to a political motive, but was purely administrative, originating with the former minister of public works, Saraceni, and continuing with the present minister, Giovanni Giolitti.

Aldermen J. L. McLendon, for more than a year a member of the special traction committee of city council, Saturday was named chairman of that body by Mayor Walter A. Sims, succeeding Alderman J. R. Bachman, the only member the mayor failed to reappoint for 1925 after the old committee was abolished by council last Monday. Alderman W. B. Hartfield has been named to fill the place left vacant by the mayor's failure to reappoint Bachman.

J. L. McLendon stated Saturday that he would only accept nomination together for its first meeting early next week—probably Tuesday. Other than that, however, he had nothing to say, and would give no indication as to when the report would be ready for submission to council.

In addition to Aldermen McLendon and Hartfield, the committee is composed of Councilmen W. C. Jenkins and James L. Wells and J. Beall. The latter two, who retired from council Monday, were reappointed as private citizens because of their association with the petition for relief petition and the Beeler report.

Although Mr. McLendon was unable to state when the committee's report will be ready for council, it is believed that it will be presented at the meeting January 19.

Mr. Bachman has announced that regardless of his removal from the committee, he plans to make a complete report of his investigations either to council or to the general public.

THE CONSTITUTION'S REAL ESTATE REVIEW

Annual Real Estate Meet Proves Important Event

Interesting Report Rendered by President A. S. Adams on Accomplishments of Past Year.

The outstanding event of the Atlanta Real Estate board for the year was the annual dinner held Thursday at noon on the roof of the Cecil hotel, when President Albert S. Adams outlined the activities proposed for 1925, and reported upon achievements of the year just closed. Another important feature of the meeting was the announcement of committee appointments and the announcement of names of delegates to both the state convention to be held in Columbus and the national gathering of realtors to convene in Dallas, Tex., January 10. The meeting was largely attended by members, associate members and invited guests, and a splendid dinner was served by the Cecil.

President Albert S. Adams, in outlining the duties of the organized real estate men for 1925, called special attention to the code of ethics that was adopted by the national association of real estate boards for the guidance and instruction of realtors in their dealings with the public. He said that this splendid business document should be read and observed by all members of the board. The adoption of a code of ethics for the state of Georgia, through which the standards of real estate men may be raised and those untrained for the business kept out of the profession, was also discussed by the president, who gave it his heartiest endorsement. He said that the realtors of Atlanta and the state should make every effort to secure the passage of the measure.

Official Property Appraisal. The official appraisal of property, which is done through specially appointed committees by the real estate board, also was dwelt upon by the president in his report, which showed that not only has there been a growing acceptance of the real estate board's appraisals, but that many large properties have been valued by the organization committee. The appraisal committee of the Atlanta Real Estate board, which is not only being used by the property owners, real estate men and others, but has become regularly employed by state and city officials, and big business concerns who realize the value of having real estate appraised by responsible experts.

After touching upon all phases of the board's activities for the year, President Adams called attention to many things that he declared could be accomplished by the real estate men for Atlanta's good, such as aiding in the solution of transportation, educational and taxation matters. He said many municipal and civic matters could be materially helped through the activities of the real estate board and he appealed to the members of the organization to help in giving Atlanta better and more extended advertising.

The address of President Adams and the annual report were received with interest by the members, and much interest was shown by the announcement of committees for the coming year. The annual report of President Adams, as read to the members, is given below:

YEARLY REPORT OF THE ATLANTA REAL ESTATE BOARD.
To Members Atlanta Real Estate Board:
Gentlemen—The activities of the Atlanta Real Estate board for the year 1924 were entrusted to 24 committees, each committee being designated for certain activities and made responsible to handle any matters coming under their hands during the year. Some of these committees have been more active than others, but it is felt that each was made at all times to meet such responsibilities that may have been designated to them.

The following is a brief statement in regard to their activities:
1. Annual Banquet—Edward M. Chapman, chairman. The annual banquet was held on Friday night, February 2, at the Capital City club. A large number of the members, their families and guests were present. Those attending felt that the banquet was successful in every way and that these in charge should be congratulated for the efficient manner in which the activity was handled.

2. Appraisal Committee—Forrest Adair, Jr., chairman. The appraisal committee has been especially active during the past year. Thirteen different committees were made amounting to $2,425,705. The largest appraisal being $200,000 and the smallest $1,000. This committee consisted of 20 members and each extended every cooperation when asked to do so. The chairman gave of his time in an unselfish way and his efforts have not only been a help to the board's activities, but have helped materially in a financial way. The chairman urges all members to refrain from giving opinions as to the value of property. Refer all such requests to the appraisal committee of the board. Curbstone opinions are worthless and do more harm than good.

3. Arbitration Committee—Rivers, chairman. We are glad to report that the arbitration committee had only one case during the year, and this was handled with dispatch and effectiveness.

4. Rental and Lease Committee—Frank Malone, chairman. The rental and lease committee has been active and has held quite a few successful meetings. The outstanding work this committee has done is in the drawing of a standard lease for the use of members of the board. The committee has held its last meeting in this respect and desires to get the finished lease to every member for use at the earliest possible date.

5. Taxation Committee—J. H. Ewing, chairman. This committee has done some valuable work during the year in helping prevent an increase in taxes. While they are not successful in doing any decrease, they have demonstrated to the officials that they are interested in this subject and are making an effort in the interest of the taxpayers.

6. Finance Committee—W. H. Evans, chairman. This committee, with other members of the board, appeared before the county commissioners to ask that the rate be reduced from $1.00 to $1.50. It also appeared before the city assessors of the city and asked for no increase in assessments be allowed.

7. Membership Committee—Active, Dana Belser, chairman. Through the efforts of this committee, 16 new active members have been secured for the board during the year. Associate Membership Committee—George M. Brown, Jr., chairman. Nine new associate members were secured through the efforts of this committee in the year 1924.

8. New Constitution Adopted. 9. National Convention—The Atlanta board was well represented at the annual meeting in August and at the convention in Washington. A convention club was formed which was quite profitable in a financial way and was also helpful in encouraging a number of our members to attend.

10. State Convention—Brooks Meli, chairman. The Atlanta board was very active at the convention of the Georgia Real Estate association held in August in January. Benjamin D. Watkins, president of the state association, George Harrison was the top officer in the Atlanta Real Estate board and was elected president of the state association. All members of the Atlanta board hold membership in the state and national associations through their membership in the board.

11. Rules, Rules and Customs—Ward Wight, chairman. The committee has been very active in revising the rules, rules and customs applying to members of the board. It is felt that their efforts in the new rules, rules and customs will be of great help to the board and its members. Their findings were printed in booklet form and sent to all members, who are urged to make use of same.

12. Multiple Listing Bureau—The bureau of multiple listing of the board, which has more than eight of whom have taken an active interest in the bureau's activities during the year. The committee believes that the principle of multiple listing is in the interest of the public and that it is a fact that their efforts in the new rules, rules and customs will be of great help to the board and its members. Their findings were printed in booklet form and sent to all members, who are urged to make use of same.

Other members of the Atlanta Real Estate board attending the convention at Dallas are Forrest Adair, Sr., and H. H. Robinson, of the Adair Realty and Trust company.

The committee believes that the principle of multiple listing is in the interest of the public and that it is a fact that their efforts in the new rules, rules and customs will be of great help to the board and its members. Their findings were printed in booklet form and sent to all members, who are urged to make use of same.

13. Board of Directors—The directors have held nine meetings in 1924, at which the affairs and activities of the board were taken under consideration and discussed in an orderly and efficient manner.

14. Committee Meetings—There were a large number of committee meetings held by the board during the year. Some of these were held at the board's headquarters, while others were held at the homes of the members. The committee meetings were held in a most efficient manner and were of great help to the board and its members.

15. Code of Ethics—The code of ethics of the national association was adopted by the Atlanta Real Estate board. In doing this the members made a forward step in bringing the membership closer together. An organization is being created which will regulate the business with the public and with each other on principles of fair dealing. The code of ethics was printed in the booklet issued by the rules, rules and customs committee. Members are urged to make use of the code of ethics in every detail. A Quaint Semi-Bungalow in English Style

Here is an attractive semi-bungalow with English influence in design. The house is of stucco on wire lath, over frame construction. The finish is a very popular and excellent one, since it gives a substantial appearance to the house and at the same time makes such repairs as painting, etc., practically unnecessary. Only the window trim and exterior woodwork need a good shade of brown, would surely be very pleasing. The little shutters would be lovely in either blue or orange.

A vestibule with coat closet provides entrance to the house. There is a large living room with fireplace on one side and a very pretty bay window on the opposite side. Both these features add much to the charm of the most occupied room in the house. There is a compact little dining alcove and a well-equipped kitchen together with two bed rooms and a tiled bath on the first floor.

The stairs lead up to a center hall on the second floor and here one finds two additional bed rooms and a larger bath. A well-planned linen closet is provided near the bathroom, which is a large space provided for storage, over the sun porch and in connection with bed room No. 4.

Steam heating plant, coal bin, cold room, etc., may all be found in the cellar. Cost, about $9,800. Complete working plans and specifications may be obtained for a nominal sum from the building editor. Refer to house A-130.

Smith-Rankin Co. Names Sheppard Subdivision Mgr.
An announcement of interest to members of the real estate and business world of Atlanta was that W. R. Sheppard, well-known realtor, has been appointed manager of subdivisions of the J. R. Smith & M. S. Rankin company. Mr. Sheppard, who has a wide experience in handling high-class realty, will take active charge of Morningstar, North Highlands and Sylvan Hills, subdivisions of the above company, it was stated.

W. R. Sheppard, who is one of the best-known real estate men in the city, served for several years with the Rogers Realty company, during which time he promoted a number of fine properties for that company, among which were Ponce de Leon Heights and Virginia Highlands. For the past year he has been actively connected with the subdivisions department of the J. R. Smith & M. S. Rankin company, selling the high-class home sites in those well-known properties. He is a member of the real estate board and is connected with a number of fraternal and civic organizations.

In taking up the management of the subdivisions department of the Smith & Rankin company, Mr. Sheppard is said to have received congratulations from many of his friends and business associates. The work he is assuming is in the initial or experimental state and he will have the opportunity of showing the quality of his salesmanship. His friends have the greatest faith in his ability to make good and predictions are that he will make a splendid showing in his new connection. During the past year something like 70 homes have been sold in Sylvan Hills, the southside subdivision of the Smith-Rankin company, and several million dollars' worth of homes and home sites have been disposed of in Morningstar and North Highlands, it was reported.

Red Cross Meeting.
A meeting of the executive committee of the Atlanta chapter, American Red Cross, has been called for Tuesday afternoon, January 13, at 4 o'clock, in Mr. Parker's office, 334 E. Peachtree street. All members are urged to attend this first meeting of the new year.

SCREEN STAR SEEKS TO DIVORCE MATE.
Los Angeles, Cal., January 10.—Anna Rubens, screen actress, whose off-stage name is Anna Goodman, today applied to the superior court here for a divorce from her husband, Sam Sheppard. Goodman started beating her on their honeymoon after their marriage at Greenwich, Conn., August 12, 1923. The Goodmans separated in January, 1924.

DUFFEE AND FREEMAN SELECT NEW PATTERNS.
Paul W. Duffee and George Freeman, Jr., of Duffee-Freeman Realty company, have left for Grand Rapids and Chicago furniture markets for the purpose of selecting new merchandise for the spring and summer seasons. They also will attend big furniture shows now in progress there.

Architectural Possibilities in Homes Shown in Unusual Remodeling Features.
Many a plain, uninteresting old house, apparently not even worth a second glance, has the making of an artistic and attractive home. More and more, people are beginning to see the possibilities hidden in the stiff and uncompromising lines of these old dwellings.

The amazing part of it all is how much a few well-planned remodeling changes will accomplish. As an example, take the plain little cottage in the smaller illustration accompanying this article. It is hard to imagine a less promising exterior. Yet there are possibilities in its very simplicity—in its honest, four-square construction. As a matter of fact, there is no better starting point for improvements than one of these old, unpretentious, straight-forward looking old cottages.

Note the transformation effected by a few alterations as shown by the new picture. A long dormer at the right side of the house increases the usefulness of the two main bedrooms and provides space for a bathroom. A small entrance porch, and a sitting porch opening from the living room and dining room, add comfort and

ANNOUNCEMENT OF ST. ANDREWS PHARMACY.
An announcement has been sent out by the Wynne-Claughton Realty company, opening of the Saint Andrews pharmacy, 305 West Peachtree street in the fashionable Saint Andrews apartment hotel. A complete line of drugs and medicines is carried by the store for the convenience of the guests, it was announced. The Saint Andrews pharmacy is under the supervision of C. W. BOYS' AND GIRLS' PERMANENT CAMP BUILT AT ATHENS.
Athens, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—Camp Wilkins, the boys and girls camp on the campus of the State College of Agriculture, is now completed and ready for occupancy. An announcement by Dr. Andrew M. Soule, the entire project, including the lake and building, cost $100,000, it is stated. John J. Wilkins, Athens banker, was the principal contributor, while friends of the institution, representing practically every county in the state, furnished the remainder of the funds.

More than 1,000 boys and girls, members of the agricultural clubs, were enrolled in Camp Wilkins last summer when it was first opened. More than 200 vocational agricultural students will use the building during farmers' week here this month, it has been announced.

So far as known, Camp Wilkins is the only permanent camp maintained for the use of agricultural club members in the United States. Much favorable comment has been received here from all parts of the country in regard to the plan and other states are said to be contemplating the erection of similar structures.

Many a plain, uninteresting old house, apparently not even worth a second glance, has the making of an artistic and attractive home. More and more, people are beginning to see the possibilities hidden in the stiff and uncompromising lines of these old dwellings.

The amazing part of it all is how much a few well-planned remodeling changes will accomplish. As an example, take the plain little cottage in the smaller illustration accompanying this article. It is hard to imagine a less promising exterior. Yet there are possibilities in its very simplicity—in its honest, four-square construction. As a matter of fact, there is no better starting point for improvements than one of these old, unpretentious, straight-forward looking old cottages.

SENIATORS WON BY PLUGGING, DECLARES HARRIS

Keystone Performer Needed at Detroit Camp

Prospects for Pennant At Detroit Camp Bright; Pitching Staff Is Strong

This is the first installment of the autobiography of Stanley Harris, youngest major league baseball manager in the history of the game and the victorious strategist and one of the outstanding players in the 1924 world series, in which his Washington club won the pennant for the first time. The rise of Harris from colliery boy to big league manager in eight years is one of the most remarkable life stories America has ever produced.

BY STANLEY (BUCKY) HARRIS.

Manager, World Champion Washington Senators.

Loose jointed and lumbering, he ambled to the center of the diamond. More than 35,000 persons, including the president of the United States, Mrs. Coolidge and high government and diplomatic officials, joined in the cheers that drowned the announcer's megaphoned message: "John-son—now—pitch—ing—for—Wash—ing—ton."

It was the beginning of the ninth inning of the seventh game of the World's series between the Washington American's and the New York Giants in Washington. The score was 3 to 3. The game count for the series was the same. This, then, was the contest upon which the world's baseball championship hung. And I staked my hopes—and perhaps my reputation as a manager—upon Walter Johnson.

(Copyright, 1925, in U. S., Canada and Great Britain by North American Newspaper Alliance. All rights reserved.)

Hardly a person in that vast crowd, from President Coolidge down to the smallest boy, but who wanted to see the great pitcher win. Their cheers, in one of the most spontaneous outbursts in the history of the game, showed that. But some of them, I am sure, while hoping for the best, feared the worst. I was supremely confident, however, that Walter would hold the Giants, and that, if we could get him a run, we would win the game and the world's championship.

Planned for Situation.

In fact, I planned the night before to use Johnson in just such a situation, should it arise. "Cotton" O'Day was slated to start the game, make way for George Mogridge, with Fred Marberry in reserve and Johnson saved for the big emergency. I had a cold, reasoning, not sentiment, dictated such a program. Johnson was our best pitcher, the leading twirler in the American league. True, the Giants had beaten him twice, but it didn't seem in the cards that they could turn the trick again—it felt right. He told me he felt fine before the game, and when he was up, I knew he had all his stuff. The Giants soon realized it, too.

Johnson had that vast throng in an almost continuous uproar as he moved down the New York batters. When he fanned George Kelly, after purposely passing Young in the ninth, I felt like jumping in the crowd. Again in the eleventh he repeated the performance. Then I knew my confidence had not been misplaced. I saw the world's championship within our grasp.

At World of Five Years.

"Muddy" Ruel carried the baseball title over the plate in the next inning on Earl McNeely's two-bagger. Then the Griffith stadium became a hellion. Cheers crashed over the field. Hats, coats and cushions rained about me when I met Ruel as he crossed the plate. We raced the clubhouse with a jubilant pack of fans at our heels. There the boys were singing and shouting. I was so dazed I don't remember what they said. They must not. Probably I did. Realization that I had led a club to victory, in what has been called the greatest victory of the century, the story of the game, hadn't struck me yet.

Not once that afternoon had I thought of the prestige or money that would go to the victor. I was a content to fight every inch of the way and to win if that was possible. This was the attitude of all the players. The Griffith field in the championship series and the American league campaign, too. From the opening of the season I had preached that the job was to each day's work to the best of our ability and to let tomorrow and yesterday take care of themselves. If we lost a game postmortem, we would hold no grudge. We tried to profit by our mistakes and let it go at that.

And now the season was over and I was manager of the world's champion team at 27 years of age. Even with the Washington players rejoicing, the congratulations and the shouts of the joy-maddened mob outside, I couldn't realize my good fortune. Six years before I had been working in a coal mine. Only five years previous I had come to the Washington club as a green major league recruit.

Crowd Acclaims Him.

I left the clubhouse still in a near daze and went to my hotel. Friends dragged me to the lobby. There a something crowd was celebrating Washington's victory. I stepped down on just how much the triumph meant to the people of Washington. A young boy in the crowd shouted "Hurrah for Bucky!" When I heard that I rubbed the back of my hand across them. It came away wet.

Later I went to the "specs" to Judge Landis, the ruler of organized baseball. Looking down Pennsylvania avenue from a window of his rooms, all Washington seemed to be beating. Newspapers who had seen the Armistice day jubilation in the national capital, in other great American cities and in Paris, said this was the greatest demonstration of our day. The display of carnival spirit aided me. For the first time I realized what a truly wonderful baseball world we were the people of this country. Before my eyes I saw a city gone mad over our victory. And from the masses of congratulation that began coming in from all over the country I knew Washington's joy was shared elsewhere.

Still I didn't quite grasp what it meant to be the leader of a world's championship club. I took that as part of the day's work, and took that as just greeted a had day. Soon after leaving Judge Landis' suite my attention was attracted by a man in a dark suit, who was a stickler which read "Bucky," posted on the windshield. No one in the crowd recognized me by this for there were hundreds of other taxis so labeled. Finally we were held up by a traffic policeman who declared no auto could pass. Our driver argued the matter.

"Only the president can get by here," the cop declared as if to wind up the argument.

"Man, I got 'Bucky' Harris in this bus," the driver came back.

"Why didn't you say so at first?" the traffic man protested. "In your way." And he let us through. Then I knew I had reached the top in the baseball world.

Tomorrow: Another Side of the Picture.

Harris, Youngest Pilot, Became Semi-Pro at 14

Stanley Harris, more widely known as "Bucky," youngest big league baseball manager on record and pilot of the 1924 world champions, the Senators, went to work in the coal mines at the age of 13 and was a semi-pro player when he was a year older.

His remarkable story of pluck and determination in the face of adversity begins on November 8, 1896, when he was born at Port Jervis, N. Y. And he was born on Ball street. He moved to Pittsburg, Pa., when he was five and at once began to hope. Baseball ran in the family; his father had been a semi-professional pitcher for Hughey Jennings and an elder brother, Merle, also became a semi-professional.

His chance came in 1914, when he was 17, when he was signed by the Washington Senators. He failed twice more in the same year with lesser clubs. And when he landed a job with Norfolk, the war disbanded the Virginia league. But he kept on.

With Reading in 1917, with Buffalo in the International league in 1918; then headed for military camp when the armistice was signed, and back to Buffalo in 1919, a year memorable for the fact that McGraw watched him work out at the Polo grounds and passed him up.

In 1919 Harris, who could have been sold to other clubs, picked Washington because he thought he would have a chance to play regularly from the outset. He made his big-league debut in New York in 1919 in a doubleheader. The next year he became Washington's regular second baseman and in 1924, at the age of 27, was made manager of the team, being the youngest big-league pilot ever known.

St. Louis, January 10.—Sixteen exhibition games, one of them with National league teams, will be played by the St. Louis Americans during the spring training season, Business Manager Bill Friel announced tonight.

The major contests will be played against Brooklyn and St. Louis Cardinals, and probably the Boston and Philadelphia teams. Other games include Milwaukee and Toledo of the American association and Birmingham, Nashville and Memphis of the Southern league.

The schedule opens with a game at Tarpon Springs, the Browns' training camp, on Wednesday, March 11, with Brooklyn. The date for the debut of the team for the training camp has not been definitely fixed. The first squad probably will report on Monday, February 23.

Members of the team are expected here for spring training in about a month.

New York, January 10.—Thomas S. Rice, sports writer of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle and the American representative of the National Sporting Club of England, arrived in this country today on the Lapland and announced he would open negotiations immediately with Eddie Kane, manager of Tommy Gibbons, relative to the proposed match between Gibbons and Louis Angel Firpo, Argentine near-weight, to be held at the London club.

Rice said Kane was expected in New York within a few days to talk over the matter with him. He said he had an attractive offer to make to the St. Paul boxer. Rice declared that Firpo has already signed contracts for the match.

VERN CLEMONS QUILTS PROFESSIONAL BALL

Marshalltown, Iowa, January 10.—Vern Clemons, of this city, since 1919 a catcher for the St. Louis Cardinals, announced today that he was giving up baseball and would go to Chicago to become associated with a real estate firm.

ALABAMA WHIPS MISS. CHOCTAWS

University, Ala., January 10.—Alabama came back into her own here tonight and swept the Mississippi Choctaws before 'em. The final score was 33 to 26, but indicates little of the fight made by both teams.

The Choctaws sneaked away to a few points lead, following field goals by Laird and Berry, but Cohen was substituted for Carter and the speed of the Crimson increased and they soon assumed the lead. The half ended in "Bama's" favor, 21 to 14.

Fast and furious came points for the Choctaws in the second half, after the two teams had battled up and down the floor for approximately five minutes without registering a point. One point more than "Bama's" 21 was registered by the Choctaws before the Crimson resumed their scoring tactics and then for several minutes it went see-saw until the last few minutes of the game.

Alabama looked much better tonight than she did last night and played her best game of the season. Even at this time the play of the Crimson showed signs of improvement. They needed much development before they tackle any more teams like the Choctaws.

"Shorty" Probst led the Crimson in their scoring attack, shooting five field goals and one free shot in the first half. He dropped in two more field goals in the second. Cohen landed three shots for his day's work, and Stabler did likewise for the Choctaws.

BUCKY, CLARK REACH FLORIDA

Tampa, Fla., January 10.—President Clark Griffith and Manager Bucky Harris, of the Washington Senators, reached Tampa today, en route to the local golf courses today. They arrived from Jacksonville early yesterday, driving through in an automobile.

"Nothing to say about baseball," they were quoted as saying. "We are taking a vacation and not even thinking of the game."

Members of the team are expected here for spring training in about a month.

FLA. MERMAIDS SHOW PROMISE

St. Augustine, Fla., January 10.—The first swimming meet of the Alcazar Athletic association held in the Alcazar casino pool last night, under the auspices of the Florida Athletic association, was a comparative close game, such was not the case for when the half ended Inman Park was on the long end of a 14-3 score.

Inman Park played its usual good passing game and it was to that end that such a large score was run up in the first half. The scoring for Inman Park was well divided among all five players with the exception of Wilson, who played an entirely defensive game all the way.

BEARS TO PLAY IRISH QUINTET

Macon, Ga., January 10.—Notes from the diamond here this print, according to announcement by Coach Stanley L. Robinson upon his return from Chicago.

Two games will be played on April 17 and 18, the coach said.

Twenty games already have been scheduled for Mercer this spring and negotiations are under way for other diamond engagements.

Oakhurst, St. Paul Fives Win Close Cage Encounters

Scoring a field goal from the center of the court in the last 40 seconds of play, Sutton, playing right forward for Oakhurst, Saturday night defeated Anchor Feds, 17 to 15, in one of the best amateur basketball games ever played on the Y. M. C. A. court.

Not only did Oakhurst and Anchor Feds put up a great battle, but St. Paul defeated Calvary 21 to 19 in another close affair, and Inman Park defeated Fortified Hills 20 to 14. The "Y" refs defeated T. N. T. 30 to 23, and Jackson Hill easily defeated Grant Park 25 to 17 in the anchor game.

Sutton was the star in the Oakhurst game. Not only did Sutton play a great game, but every member of the Oakhurst team played his part from the very beginning. Bryant was a good running mate to Sutton and scored an equal number of points, but the long shots by Sutton were what brought thrills to the spectators and pointed him out as the outstanding star.

The Anchor Feds also played a great game, one that was hard to lose, but inability to sink long shots robbed the Feds of a chance of victory. Harris, at right forward, and Johnson, at left forward, played a stellar game for the losers, but lacked the accuracy of Sutton in the pinches.

St. Paul Winner.
St. Paul won another exciting game in the Sunday School league Saturday night, defeating the Calvary five, 21 to 19. St. Paul began a great offensive attack in the first part of the game when the half ended, St. Paul was on the long end of a 13-7 score. Not only did the St. Paul team play great offensive ball in the first half, but its guarding was exceptionally good. A different Calvary team in spirit started a rally in the latter part of the game.

Reds Win Easy Game.
The Y. M. C. A. "Reds" easily defeated the T. N. T. five, 30 to 23, in an interesting game.

Speed and passing with Freeman and Adeock in the hole to do the scoring were the characteristics of the "Reds." Freeman, of the "Reds," led in the scoring attack with 11 points to his credit while Adeock was a close second with 10 points.

The scoring for the losers was divided between O'Connor, a substitute

DECATUR FIVES LOSE TWO GAMES

Decatur dropped two battles Saturday night in the opening game of the cage season, the girls losing to Athens High, 39-20, and the boys' five being noosed out by an independent Marietta girls' team by a comfortable score Friday night and then taking the Decatur lassies into camp Saturday. Until last night the Decatur girls had not lost a game in something like three years, and the two games lost last winter were to Fulton and Marietta.

This year, with the loss of Stone and Cunningham, the Decatur team is crippled and coach has had a tough job molding his team. This was not the first game for the girls, the team having defeated the Wesley nurses and Druid Hills Epworth league teams before the holidays.

The Decatur boys' club is a new machine, too, the freshmen club is certainly no slouch, however, and the Decatur club has hardly had time to reach full strength since the holiday break. The freshmen team has been playing together for over a month, being noosed out in the finals of the Emory basketball tourney held before Christmas, and the team has since won some notable victories.

The Decatur girls lined up with Glenney and Allen, forwards; Braswell, center, and Hinton and Duke, guards. The boys' five started with Jackson and Eble at forwards, Walker at center, and Whitteburg and Murdock at the guards.

Martin Will Never Equal Terry McGovern—Edgren

BY ROBERT EDGREN.

Now the new generation of sport critics is talking about Eddie ("Cannonball") Martin as "another Terry McGovern." I wonder if anyone who didn't follow this marvelous McGovern in his early fights can imagine what it means to be "another Terry McGovern."

For my part, I know that had I never seen McGovern in action I couldn't possibly today picture a McGovern to a purpose.

There never has been another fighter with Terry's ring fury. It was the suddenness of his attack that earned him the name "Terrible Terry." The finest boxing skill was no defense against his overwhelming power. Harry Forbes, the cleverest of second fighting year, in Terry's second fight was knocked out in 15 rounds. Tim Callahan was a ghost to other boxers, but he couldn't keep away from Terry. As for the blunders, he out-slugged them with ease.

Tore Into Champion.
In 1890 Pedlar Palmer, a wonderfully clever little English champion, came to New York to get a fight with George Dixon for the world's featherweight title. Sam Harris, who managed Terry, met Palmer and his party with a band of a parade and persuaded his man, or that it would be a good stunt to let the English champion warm up in America on a good second-rater—McGovern—before tackling the champion. The fight was in open air at Maspeth. McGovern's wife watched from a house across the street. Flags, bands and much pomp introduced the fight and took up a lot of time, which was lucky, for the fight was short. At the bell Palmer jumped up and squared off. McGovern was clear across the ring, leaping furiously to the attack—leaving the champion, and at jabbing. But Terry paid little attention to his jab, and less to Palmer's head.

Instantly he was ripping in body blows that bent Palmer double. A little over a minute the British champion was down, rolling on the floor. The timekeeper was holding back the hammer of the going in his right hand. Someone jogged his elbow and the hammer slipped. At the clang of the gong the seconds piled into the ring and rushed Palmer to and fight twice as hard afterward. They said the same thing about Tommy Murphy and other long-jawed exers, but McGovern and the rest could take punches.

It isn't hard to picture McGovern. In his corner waiting the first bell he was just like Jack Dempsey, quivering with the tremendous effort of waiting for the fight to begin. At the first bell he leaped forward and he was tearing into his man with a swirling flurry of blows that nothing could block and that no one could escape.

There never has been another fighter with Terry's ring fury. It was the suddenness of his attack that earned him the name "Terrible Terry." The finest boxing skill was no defense against his overwhelming power. Harry Forbes, the cleverest of second fighting year, in Terry's second fight was knocked out in 15 rounds. Tim Callahan was a ghost to other boxers, but he couldn't keep away from Terry. As for the blunders, he out-slugged them with ease.

BY KENNETH L. EAGON.

Tyrus Raymond Cobb is said to be perfectly satisfied with the Detroit Tigers as they will start the 1925 pennant race in the American league, with the possible exception of the second-base berth, which last year was alternately occupied by three men, O'Rourke, Burke and Haney.

Cobb has recalled "Flip" Neun, who played first base for the St. Paul club from the American association last season, being a big sensation and leading the association in batting practically all season. Neun never was displaced from the leadership of the association in stolen bases. He was with Birmingham in the Southern league during the seasons 1922-23.

Neun Is Compromise.

Now, it is Cobb's idea to keep Neun in reserve as a compromise between go-between in a contemplated trade to get the Tigers a first-class second-baseman. Everybody knows that there are several big league ball clubs on both leagues—sorely in need of a good first baseman. For three years, the keystone position has troubled Cobb. Every year he has been looking for a "Tep" Young, and now that Cobb has Neun, the sensation, to compare with it, it is very likely that the Tigers will get Neun as a second baseman. This is the only position in question on the Tigers' payroll.

Blue at First.

A very well-defined report which was received from the president of the Atlanta late last week was to the effect that the sparkling "Flip" Neun may be sent to the Cincinnati Reds. This was virtually confirmed by Dan Mitchell, president of the Atlanta baseball club, through whose courtesy the writer was able to obtain the information and also the records of many baseball players and the "in" on several pending deals.

It is a known fact that the Tigers already have entered into some kind of negotiations in which they are to receive from the Cincinnati Reds, Posse and Caveney, both infielders. One of these men may play second base for the Tigers.

Among the latest rookie additions to the Detroit Tigers' pitching staff for 1925 are Clark, a right hander, from Birmingham, of the Southern league; Good, also of Birmingham; Gibson and Smith, both of Asheville, N. C., and Collins, of Arizona. They all look good, according to Cobb, and Mr. Michalewicz said they all had the stuff in them. They will be given a fair chance to show it.

Del Pratt, who played first base for Detroit most of the 1924 season, has been unconditionally released by Cobb. He is now a free agent. Blue, who was injured last year in the season of 1924, and who has been one of the best initial sappers in the business, will handle things at the first of camp.

Harry Heilmann, demon slugger, cannot help but drive the Tigers to a pennant, operating in right field. Heilmann should again lead the American league in hitting.

Cobb of course will adequately and brilliantly cover center field. In his corner to revive him, Lucky the accident cut, the loss in Palmer's favor, not in McGovern's. After a minute's rest Palmer came up fresh but still bewildered by the fury of McGovern's attack. Before he began to fight McGovern, he began with furious blows that could guard and in a few seconds it was all over.

After the fight there was nothing for Terry to do but fight the great George Dixon, Little Chicago, reputed to be invincible in his class. First Terry moved over a few first class men in the first round or two. Then came the fight with Dixon. There's no doubt that George Dixon, in his prime, was a ring marvel, like McGovern, but far more scientific fighter. But he was slipping a bit. Knowing exactly what to expect, Dixon used all of his great skill and speed and calm, hard hitting to try to wear Terry down.

McGovern battered through Dixon's defense and was utterly careless of Dixon's blows. In the eighth round, McGovern knocked Little Chocolate down eight times, and won on a technical knockout. Dixon never was any good after that beating.

Corner Starts Well.
Oscar Gardner was the first to make any impression on Terry. He hit Terry a terrific punch on the nose, but Terry, who was a manager, not driven by his ruling instinct to fight, McGovern climbed up Gardner's legs as Gardner stood over him, clung to him, and then he knocked him down eight times, and won on a technical knockout. Dixon never was any good after that beating.

Later he knocked out Eddie Santry in five rounds; Eddie Lenny in two; Tommy White, in three; Lightweight Champion Frank Erne in three; Joe Bernstein in seven; Joe Gans in two; Alvin Karpis in two; Eddie Hanlon in six, and Tommy Murphy in one. Several of these boys would be champions if they were fighting today. Ernie was the cleverest of all lightweight, Gans the greatest of all middle weight, and punching power, Herrera the greatest puncher.

McGovern's finish came through taking on theatrical work when fights were scarce. He abandoned his crouch and stood up straight to box, size style. He held back his punches for exhibition purposes. When he fought Young Corbett at Hartford, Thanksgiving day, 1901, he stood straight and rushed Corbett furiously, but he was not serious. Corbett, a great puncher and with a born champion's icy temperament, met him deliberately and beat him to the punch in the first round. In the second round, the second fight across on the chin was a knockout. McGovern could still beat other good men. He shipped Dave Sullivan in 15 rounds, and knocked Eddie Hanlon out in six at Philadelphia. That was one of the fastest fights I ever saw. Hanlon put Terry down and nearly out. Dazed, Terry reeled to his feet, rushed Hanlon across the ring and hung him senseless on the ropes with a wild flurry of furious blows. But he was not serious. Corbett knocked him out a second time in 11 rounds in San Francisco. Terry did little in the more boxing, and he died of pneumonia a few years afterward. I'll see a lot of good boxes, but I have no expectation of ever seeing another McGovern. A curious thing, McGovern never had the slightest mark for all his desperate fights. I asked him why he laughed.

"Well," said Terry, "I guess I fought so fast they didn't have time to hit me."

He has been said that Cobb pines to play some strange game. But the most recent interview with the Georgia peach indicates that Cobb will be in the line-up most every game in 1925.

Reds Wingo Counted On.

"Red" Wingo and Heilmann Maunsh will alternate in the left guard. Wingo was secured from Toronto of the International league in 1923. He lives at Norcross, Ga., and was with the Atlanta Crackers in 1921-22. He went up to the Philadelphia Athletics, but after a try-out, moved on to the Tigers and has made good. Maunsh played a lot of the last season last season and is there with the waud. He and "Red" both are stickers of first water.

More power to the wrecking artillery for which the Tigers have become justly famous. Detroit has also recalled Tavenar, a shortstop, from the Fort Worth club of the Texas league, from which they got Rigney, the present incumbent. Tavenar was considered one of the best shortstops in the Texas league, but, unless Rigney develops some more power, he will hold him in a little in 1924, the new infielder will have a tough time getting into the regular line-up. The Tigers are well fortified in the infield anyway. Burke, utility man, has been sold to the St. Paul club, and his absence will not be noted in the won and lost column, for Cobb has many new faces to look over.

Two Good Catchers.

Detroit has two of the best catchers in either big league in Woodall and Bawler. Bawler will do the first string catching, and will give some to Woodall. The job of receiving will be pretty well distributed. And then Cobb has a third-string catcher, a youngster, Clyde Manion, who is so good he may be in there in a lot of games. So much for the catchers.

James will remain at third base. He is a whole lot better than the one who was there last season, Jones, and Cobb believes he will pick up in his hitting, which was the only thing against him last season. Jones, however, is a good catcher, a dependable player Cobb has. He'll do. And now the array of pitchers. Sweet cookies.

The thought to know place old "Dutch" Leonard, who has been out of organized baseball for a couple of seasons, at the head of the list. Leonard pitched for the Detroit Tigers in the 1924 season, and he is a left hander, and a mean apple. He has kept in superb shape under his semi-pro teams all the time he has been out of the big noise. He is a left hander, and a mean apple. TIPS from the TOP of MOTOR ROW

By Oliver Willoughby

Every Sunday, some Sundays, the big men of the south's greatest automobile row will be quoted here. Each quotation will be a veritable "Tip from the Top" of Atlanta's motor row.

R. H. Martin, one of the south's largest distributors and a leader in southern automobile circles, was the first Atlantan to return from the national automobile show in New York.

He "did the show" in a day—it usually takes a week. The difference is Mr. Martin sees with understanding eyes and hears with retentive ears. "The most striking feature of the show was the profusion of new straight eights and coach models. Many of the eights were by small companies not well represented in this territory, though there were some notable exceptions—Hupmobile, for instance.

A great number of the larger manufacturers have added coaches to their line. Nash was an exception to this, but Mr. Nash and his engineers offered a new sedan which will sell at only a few more dollars than open models.

One other notable feature of the show was the reduction in the number of exhibitors. There were only 57 manufacturers represented this year against 66 last year and 84 the year before. Predictions among manufacturers have it that there will be an even smaller number next year, which makes me feel mighty glad that I have the distribution of the Nash, one of the strongest companies," said Mr. Martin.

W. D. Evans, manager of the Atlanta branch of the Miller Rubber company, believes 1925 will be one of the best years for the rubber industry.

"We have prices on a rock bottom basis; dealer stocks are for the most part clean and limited. The spring buying season for tires is near at hand. We have the best tires that the industry has ever produced, and at the lowest price at which tires have ever been offered," said Mr. Evans, while announcing his newest account in Atlanta—the Mellen Tire and Battery company.

W. G. Starnes, manager of the Atlanta branch of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber company, is as full of pep as a circus speller and he is not that kind of a man, either. He is conservative, if a salesman is ever conservative.

"We have just closed a wonderful year. Our sales, through this branch, are now at a level in monetary volume with 1920 the record year of the industry. Our volume in units is the greatest in the history of the branch.

"Our dealers' shelves are reasonably bare and with the coming spring selling season we anticipate a sales volume greater than has ever been handled through this branch," said Mr. Starnes.

C. W. Martin, Jr., manager of this district, is now at the New York show and will return via the factory in Akron.

W. C. Harris, manager of the Atlanta branch of the Firestone Tire and Rubber company, reports more than 100 per cent increase in sales of this branch for the past two months, as compared with last year.

The fiscal year of this company ends November 1. With more than 100 per cent increase to date and unusually good prospects for the remainder of their fiscal year, he sees more than a 50 per cent increase in sales for this territory.

"Our fiscal year opened November 1. Since that time we have shown a gain over the same period last year of more than 100 per cent. Our current business for (fill-in orders is unusually good, and our dealers have only limited stocks on hand.

"Throughout the territory of this branch we have increased the number and improved the caliber of our dealers. The big increase in the number of cars registered, improvement in general conditions and other figures, aside from the trend of the buyer toward our product, all point toward

MELLEN GETS MILLER
TIRE ACCOUNT HERE

M. S. Mellen, president of the Mellen Battery and Tire company, has secured the city distribution of the popular Miller line of tires. Mr. Mellen has been in the battery business here several years and operates service stations in West End, Inman Park and on Ivy street. About a year ago he added a line of tires and reports finding it a valuable addition to his battery line.

He points out the fact that the same rent, practically the same service cost—trucks and drivers—and the same office and executive forces that were required to handle the battery business alone have cared for both lines. He now has a good stock of Miller tires and with the large stock carried by the Atlanta branch of the factory he is in position to handle an almost unlimited volume of tire business without materially increasing his overhead expenses.

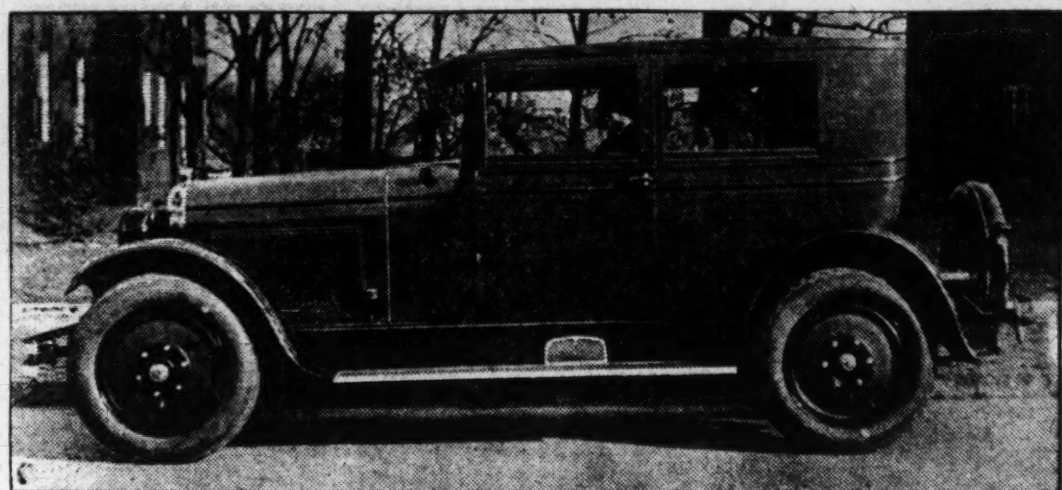

According to this interpretation, this will enable him to render a better service on both lines.

Ed G. Tegler, Robertian, and the big boss around E. M. Thomas Auto Top, was a fine theory—indidentally, this theory is the cause of his fine new building on Spring street.

"I've always felt that every business organization was under obligation to its customers in many ways. One thing which is sometimes overlooked by a few firms is its obligation to provide facilities with a capacity to serve its customers to the extent of all reasonable possible demands.

"Our business, in the territory, and with local automobile owners, has grown to the point that I was forced to either abandon this theory or provide a bigger and better plant for manufacturing and for servicing. "Happily, I chose the latter. Our new plant is modern, well lighted and large enough to allow for the expansion which seems inevitable. Our service station for the installation of the tops, curtains, seat covers, tire covers and carpets made in our plant is easily accessible and also provides for a continued growth in our retail department," said Mr. Tegler.

New Nash 63 Sedan Is Here

This new two-door Nash sedan, being shown by the Martin-Nash Motor company, is offered at a price only slightly above that of the open models. It's on the advanced six chassis.

- (1) The remarkable gain in the number of trucks registered in California is accounted for by the fact that in 1923 all trucks equipped with pneumatic tires were registered as passenger cars.
- (2) The apparent loss in the District of Columbia is accounted for by the fact that until this year there was no reciprocity with Maryland and it was necessary for many thousands of Washingtonians to take out licenses in Maryland also.
- (3) The explanation of the loss in the District of Columbia also accounts for the failure of Maryland to gain because a large number of persons who live in that state work in Washington and vice versa.

BEELAND JOINS
BROWN TIRE CO.

R. T. (BOB) BEELAND.

Bob Beeland, veteran tire salesman, with a service record of four years with Kelly, one with Howe, one with J. L. Carroll and one with Edward S. Gay, has joined the sales organization of the Brown Tire company. J. C. Brown, owner of the firm, reports an unusual increase in business last year and a determination to make 1925 show an even better increase. Mr. Brown sells the Diamond line.

BELLED BUZZARD
NOT ONLY HEARD
BUT ALSO SEEN

Quitman, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—The famous "belled buzzard" is in Brooks county. People have heard of the belled buzzard the last half century perhaps think he is a myth, but this week he was seen on the Perdick farm near Quitman. Two credible people got a close-up view of him. He is like other buzzards, of course, except that he has a small brass bell suspended to his neck which gives a clear, musical sound as he moves.

The others of the flock did not seem to mind the bell and did not avoid the belled bird.

L. C. POPE ELECTED TO DUBLIN OFFICE

Dublin, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—L. Cleveland Pope, former adjutant general of Georgia and a member of the city council of Dublin, has been named mayor pro tem. of Dublin by the incoming administration. Installation of three new aldermen and other city officials were held at the same time.

Herbert C. Moffett is mayor, with A. H. Grier as city clerk. These two officers have served many months already. The three aldermen named to fill vacancies on the board of varying terms. T. C. Keen, E. H. Langston and W. E. Beddingfield are the new aldermen.

As mayor pro tem, Mr. Pope will take a leading part in affairs of the city, as he has done through many years as a resident of the city, and will make the city an able official, his friends predict.

MARMON BREAKS OLD
PRODUCTION RECORDS

All previous records for December production were broken this year by the Nardke & Marmon Co. in the production of the 10 new Marmon models, recently announced, according to an announcement made by G. M. Williams, president and general manager of the company. The production for December exceeded by 92 per cent the production for December, 1919, the previous high December production mark for the company. The new record recalls the statement of Mr. Williams at the time he assumed the presidency of the company last June that production of Marmon cars would be increased 50 per cent over the volume maintained previously.

The large number of orders received following the announcement of the new Marmon was responsible for the new record, according to Mr. Williams. Although the factory is far behind in its orders as a result of the demand for the cars, night and holiday shifts which have been established at the factory have contributed to relieve the strain, Mr. Williams said.

SPALDING MAKES PLANS FOR HOLDING FAIR

Griffin, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—At the annual meeting of the Griffin and Spalding County Fair association this week a board of directors was elected for the ensuing year and the secretary's report submitted, showing that the fair last fall was a financial success, a nice sum being realized and applied to the indebtedness.

Directors elected were J. Woods Hammond, Julian Gassett, John B. Mills, C. C. Thomas, J. V. Chunn, W. B. Mathews, E. H. Griffin, H. B. Montgomery and E. P. Bridges.

DR. H. E. BENT ELECTED

Midville, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—In the municipal election held here this week these men were elected: Dr. H. E. Bent, mayor; W. C. Mulling, R. L. Winburn, J. E. Cross and W. E. Baxter.

DRUGGISTS TO ELECT
OFFICERS FOR 1925

Thompson on "Practical Principles to Secure Quick Turn-over in a Retail Drug Store."

An open forum on the subjects discussed will be heard. Other features of the meeting include musical features by the Georgia Railway and Power company quartet and other artists.

CHRISTIAN CHURCHES
MEETS AT GRIFFIN

Griffin, Ga., January 10.—(Special.)—The Christian churches in Georgia will hold a three days statewide evangelistic conference at Griffin commencing Monday, January 13, at which time a five-year evangelistic program to gain a million new members. The year 1925 is the last year of this campaign. Though they are far from the coveted million mark, this year is expected to see them well on towards their goal.

LEAKS FROM THE VACUUM TANK

BY OLIVER WILLOUGHBY

The Vacuum Tank must be dry! I've been waiting fully ten minutes for a glimpse of a leak to be recorded here. Ah, here it comes!

Hurrah for the South!

Nearly 18,000,000 motor vehicles were registered in the United States during 1924, previous to December 31. The number since that time will easily make the figure round. The national percentage increase was better than 15 per cent.

But here is the interesting part of it. Florida showed the greatest percentage increase—34.9 per cent. Where do you think Georgia comes in this list? Second! And a precious close second it is, with 34.5 per cent. Numerically, Georgia's increase was greater than Florida, the figures being 60,104 for Georgia and 55,872 for Florida, exclusive of trucks.

All of the southern states made good showings. Louisiana fourth, South Carolina fourth, Arkansas fifth, Alabama sixth, California seventh and North Carolina eighth. California is in good company for once.

A complete tabulation by states appears elsewhere in today's issue. This table was compiled by "Motor." It's worth keeping, especially to those in the automobile trade.

"It's a Boy."

Louis M. Vaughn, previously known to all as Louie, must hereafter be known as Mr. Vaughn. All who saw him strut down to his desk at Goldsmith's, where he has charge of one of Atlanta's biggest used car organizations, can have no doubt of this. "Chest out, chin up and a million-dollar expression" is the way Harry Cohen described his appearance. Mr. Vaughn will continue at his desk at Goldsmith's, while "Louie"—the new junior—is expected to change his office from St. Joseph's to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn at an early date. Louis Milton Vaughn, Jr., arrived just a week ago today, and it is reported that daddy is well pleased with the vocal abilities of his new salesman.

Automobile row once included many firms selling automotive equipment. It looks no as if the new "Radio Row" would include a large percentage of firms handling automotive equipment as a line.

It's Justified.

T. D. Southworth, president of the Paige-Jewett Sales company, has an even greater smile than ever. The new Jewett is the reason. It's new, greatly improved in appearance. It's been given more power. It's been given four wheel hydraulic brakes—if you want them—and it's been given a new finish.

"We have just closed a highly satisfactory year, and with the new model which we are now showing, we expect to make 1925 a real record breaker," said Mr. Southworth.

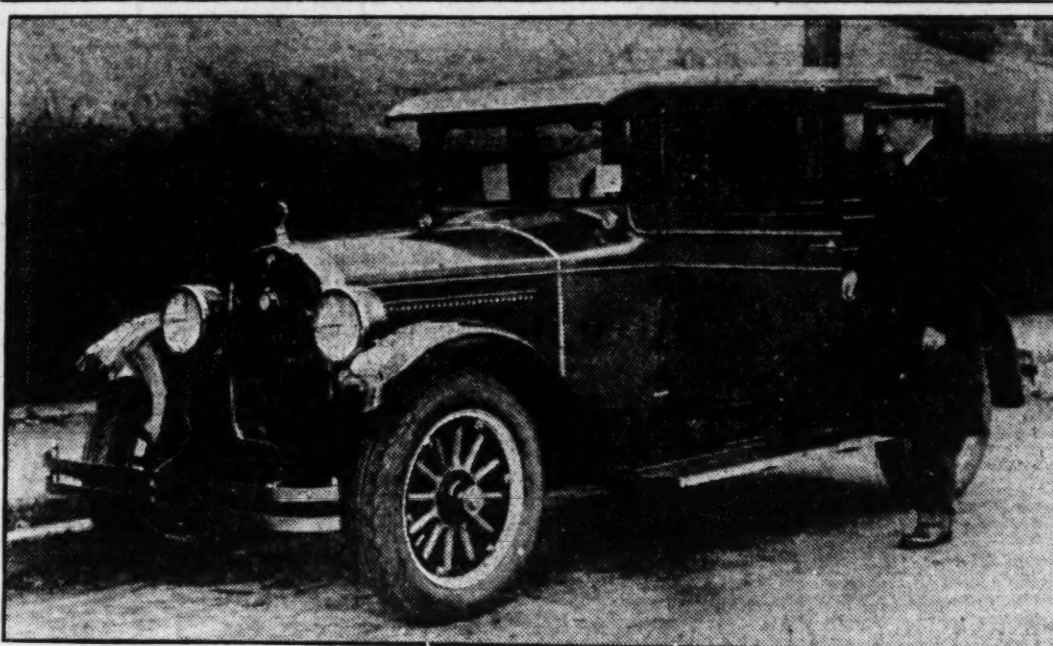

Bernard V. Stodghill, known to friends and enemies alike, as Barnie, has been confined to his home for a few days with a slight indisposition, generally known as flu. He is back on the job now as general manager for the John Smith company, distributors of Reo and Chevrolet. Glad you're back, Barnie.

Another Record.

Sam Katz, known to bookkeepers as the Automotive Sales and Service company, says Zenith sales have actually reached the point indicated by their name. The new Zenith for Fords, retailing for less than a ten spot, was one reason for this. The other Zenith carburetors did their part. There's a radio, too. The Splendor line and the United Air Cleaner also hit the top, according to Mr. Katz, both of which are prominent among the lines of automotive equipment sold and serviced by his firm.

Atlanta continues its forward stride as a factory branch distributing center. Exclusive of Ford dealers Atlanta has a factory branch or big distributor for every dealer.

Few more enthusiastic receptions were ever accorded a new automobile than that given the new Hupmobile Straight "8" which has been on display all the past week in the showrooms of the Thompson-Cauthorn Motor Co., local distributors. Seated in the above car is R. G. Young, service manager for the above concern. T. E. Cauthorn, president, is standing.

Garford Appoints.

W. R. McNary has been appointed manager of the Atlanta branch of the Garford Motor Truck company. Mr. McNary has been with Garford at other points and his appointment to the Atlanta branch provides another opportunity for him to show his stuff.

Garford has operated a branch here for some time, and previously operated a large repair depot here. Recently they moved to a new and larger building especially constructed for them on Piedmont avenue.

E. C. Andrews, manager of the Southern Motor Equipment company, has secured the distribution of Federal-Mogul bearings for his firm. They are used as factory equipment in the motors of a number of the leading trucks and automobiles.

Tudor Gas Station.

G. F. Willis, developer of Ingleside, realizes the necessity for conveniently located filling stations, yet he dislikes the conventional gas station with about the same intensity as the proud owner of a mansion who finds one being erected across the street.

Ingleside must have its service station, though, so he is building a Tudor in design, and in keeping with the other beautiful buildings which he has erected. It was designed by Arthur Neal Robinson, and is as pleasing as a filling station can be made. It's being operated by the Standard Oil company, and makes the 24th station to be opened by this firm in Atlanta and suburbs.

TALIAFERRO COUNTY INSTALLS OFFICERS

Crawfordville, Ga., January 10.—(Special).—The new board of county commissioners of Taliaferro county this week organized by electing W. W. Bird, chairman. The other members of the board are W. C. Chapman and E. M. Taylor. Bird is the only new member.

Judge M. Z. Andrews, ordinary, is clerk of the board and begins his 25th year in this capacity. He has the record of having never failed to meet with the board for 24 years. W. R. Edwards has begun the duties of his office of sheriff, succeeding W. J. Sturdivant.

AUTO MEN WILL SEE MOVIE OF SPARKPLUG

Monday evening, January 12, 8 p. m. (after supper), chamber of commerce assembly hall No. 2, Chamber of Commerce building, a special meeting of the members of the Atlanta Automobile association and their employees, particularly those in the sales and service ends of the businesses, has been called for a special, exclusive showing of a motion picture entitled "The Story of the Spark Plug." The picture was taken under the special supervision and authority of the United States government and shows the entire history of the development of the spark plug and the part it plays in the efficient operation of an automobile. There are many technical and practical phases of the spark plug clearly and fully illustrated in the picture. This is one of a series of about sixteen educational films which the government is placing at the disposal of automobile associations throughout the United States, and through special effort on the part of the Atlanta Automobile association, this picture was secured for what might be termed practically an advance showing. It is expected that the picture will meet so thoroughly with the approval and commendation of the members of the association that later on a great public showing of the picture will be had at the city auditorium, at which time all those engaged in the automobile industry within a radius of 100 miles of Atlanta, together with all owners of automobiles, will be invited to witness the showing. This is the first of a number of educational features planned by the Atlanta Automobile association to put on during 1925 for the benefit of the automobile trade.

An Indian once traded Manhattan Island for A STRING OF RED BEADS

AN Indian once swapped Manhattan Island for a string of red beads.

Not so long ago a fellow in Texas traded a great tract of now priceless oil land for a span of gray mules. And last year, a lot of smart people paid $1000, $2000—even $3000, more for a closed car than an open car of the same make would have cost them.

These are historical facts.

As long as people knew very little about downtown New York real estate, or oil land, or closed cars—great unconscious economic losses were sustained. Today you couldn't get very far in New York on a string of red beads. The owners of the oil land probably aren't scanning the market pages for quotations on gray mules.

And after people see the New Marmon Standard Closed Cars—full-fledged, four-door closed cars, with all the customary comforts and luxuries—priced virtually the same as the open models—it's going to be a tough selling job to get anyone to pay a fictitious price for a closed car or to accept as a closed car anything which falls short of time-proven closed car standards—regardless of the name or make.

Marmon has adhered rigidly to genuine closed car design with four [4] doors, and produced sumptuous Standard Sedans and Broughams—Marmon Sedans and Broughams—not one just closely confined, highly restricted closed model—but a variety of closed car styles, all selling at virtually open car prices—on the famous standard 136-inch wheelbase Marmon chassis—with the famous Marmon six-cylinder engine—at only $130 more than a Marmon open car; and Marmon open car values have always been recognized as sound and fair.

Such a feat in manufacturing alertness and skill bodes well for the New Marmon Program.

Uppermost in the minds of everyone is that relentless standard of value measurement—the never-changing diameter of a dollar—and the stubborn determination to get the most for the money.

It is a striking commentary on the intelligence of the native American people, and their sense of values, that today the Marmon factory is busier than at any time in its history—building in volume these new Standard Closed Cars at virtually open car price.

The Facts About LOW-COST TRANSPORTATION

Chapter V

WHAT ACCURACY MEANS TO MOTORISTS

- Q. What has been the measure of accuracy used in automobile motor manufacture?
- A. Until recently the basic fraction used for measuring the size and determining the fit of parts of automobile mechanism was one-thousandth of an inch.
- Q. What basis is used in measuring Star Motor Parts?
- A. Important parts of the new motor of the Star Car are fitted within "limits of tolerance" or, in other words, permissible variations of only two ten-thousandths of an inch in the case of parts subject to considerable expansion through heat, and in the case of other parts the "limit of tolerance" is reduced to one ten-thousandth of an inch.
- Q. How small is one ten-thousandth of an inch?
- A. A fine human hair measures about twenty ten-thousandths of an inch in thickness. Can you imagine a space one-twentieth as wide as the thickness of a hair?
- Q. What do such fine measurements mean to Star owners?
- A. Such refined engineering in the new Star motor means money saved to Star owners because it means perfect fit and complete interchangeability of similar parts; quiet, smooth operation, long life, high efficiency, minimized repair bills.

DODGE BROTHERS TYPE-B SEDAN

Unquestionably, the most compelling tribute to the car's stamina is its widespread use by farmers, ranchmen, surveyors, salesmen and others who travel isolated roads in all sorts of weather.

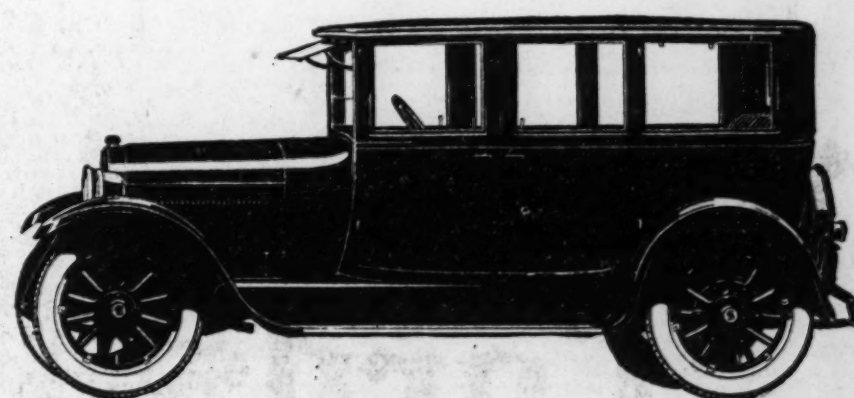

These men will tell you that a good polishing restores the durable finish to its original brightness after the car has been caked with mud for weeks.

To them it is a matter of vital importance, too, that Dodge Brothers powerful starter functions promptly after prolonged exposure to the cold.

Nor is any group of owners more constantly impressed by those elements of excess value which characterize not only the Type-B Sedan itself, but every car that Dodge Brothers build.

by trains' shoe store "foot specialists" by mail, and also by a shoe factory that has been in business since 1890. There is still room for further exploits in the propagation of arches, however, so do not feel discouraged if you have not yet been able to try out an arch. Besides, the inside and outside longitudinal and the front and rear transverse arches one might run a couple of extra miles to get to the arch store through the middle. The surface has barely been scratched, and the public will still game. It really seems that the arch push in the shoe industry was not very aggressive, after all. Here they have arrived only at the arch stage—and look for the automatic arch stage to follow. In the 6-cylinder stage and looking forward to eight cylinders. Maybe the arch will be a character in the history of a more important character in the arch prop industry.

"'Being me of the suckers,' writes R. M. G., 'who spent about $50 with a shoe store specialist for props and adhesive tape strappings, only to find after three months that I had neuritis and not a foot ailment. This was a little more than anxious to read what you may have to say on this subject.'" as at present established, had existed 3,000 years ago, we may or may not have had Greece and Rome. It is doubtful, but we should certainly have had no Old Testament and no New. The Hebrew religion would have perished of anemia and the Christian religion could never have been born. Nearly all the prophets of the Jews, from Samuel on, are patients for the alienists and candidates for the asylum. Had there been a lunatic asylum in the suburbs of Jerusalem, Jesus Christ would infallibly have been shut up in it at the outset of his public career.

"Right off that bat I must say that the abuse of this field of medical practice by unqualified persons is probably attributable at least in part to the neglect of foot ailments by physicians and podiatrists. This is an almost unstudied neglect. The medical colleges have not seen fit to devote much attention to training students for this branch of practice.

The universal contempt for life that seems to saturate our novels is, I believe, mostly a pose. It is a literary effort to shock. The same motive in another form threaded its way through our paper back novels a few years back.

It was a fine jaunt that Patrolman McIntyre, on traffic duty near the Cunard line piers, had, he was accompanied by his wife on a tour of Europe and the trip was financed by McIntyre's friend, William B. Leeds, the young millionaire. McIntyre was courteous to Mr. Leeds on several occasions and the courtesy brought dividends. He did not know the young man was a millionaire.

The traffic officer was greatly impressed with the smoothness of traffic in Paris, where there are no traffic laws.

"Maybe they got the right idea over there. It's everybody for himself and the devil take the guy in back of you," he says.

An old-timer in Paris told me that in all the time he had been there he had seen but one accident. A taxi brushed a man but did not even knock him down. He was more frightened than hurt.

What is a vaudeville headliner? Here is a description in a New York newspaper: "Aaron Hoffman wrote me a topical monologue; Max Marx made me a suit of clothes, and Lew Dockstader wined me up on how to jockey my laughs. I opened in Hartford and believe me I was a scream. I began to holler for more dough. At last the Palace sent for me and I signed up for a week. They kept me two. I stand at the corner of Forty-seventh street and little old Broadway; throw out my chest, call the agents and vaudeville managers by their first names. I am a headliner. With a home in Freeport."

There are now twelve motion picture houses in a block on upper Broadway. No keen is the competition that some are offering free admission to children who come with their parents in the afternoon.

It is the contention of the so-called Algonquin group that there is no logic in the world. Achmed Abdullah, the writer, has claimed that there is and that those who have spoken their mind about this group suffer. Mr. Abdullah's recent book, "Shackled," has received favorable notice all over the country and is selling well. Yet one cannot help but notice that at this writing not a review has appeared in New York journalism that it be corrected.

A blind newsdealer on Second avenue displays this sign above his little hut: "I was made blind by the light." The sign is a little thing that will save others I am not sightless in vain. The pity of it is I bought from a friend."

WEEKLY BIBLE TALK

BY WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Text of Today's Bible Talk by Mr. Bryan.

(Luke 22:14-23.)

And when the hour was come, He sat down, and the 12 apostles with Him.

And He said unto them, with desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer: For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.

And He took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, take this, and divide it among yourselves: For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine, until the kingdom of God shall come.

And He took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, this is My body which is given for you; this do in remembrance of Me.

Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, this cup is the New Testament in My blood, which is shed for you.

But, behold the hand of him that betrayeth Me is with Me on the table.

And truly the Son of man goeth as was determined: but woe unto that man by whom He is betrayed! And they began to enquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing.

We consider today a holy sacrament of the church—the Lord's Supper—the most beautiful custom that has ever been observed by man.

It had its prototype in the Jewish Feast of the Passover, but differs from it in many ways. The Jewish feast was observed for 1,700 years as an expression of gratitude for the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. Christ kept this Passover feast with His youth.

The plan of redemption was arranged in the beginning—"from the foundation of the world"—and was carried out perfectly in every detail. In the lesson texts that we have studied together, we have seen how Christ, conscious at all times of the work that He had come to perform and of the way in which it was to be performed, faced the ordeal with perfect calmness.

During the early part of His ministry, He endeavored to avoid publicity lest His work might be cut short before He had completed His instruction to His disciples. But when all was ready, He deliberately took up His journey to Jerusalem and permitted the demonstration that, as He expected, provoked the fatal attack upon His life. He selected the day set apart for the Feast of the Passover to partake of His farewell meal with the 12 whom He had selected and commissioned to carry on His work.

Two Messengers.

As on the day of His triumphal entry into Jerusalem, He sent messengers ahead to execute His plans. At this time Peter and John were chosen and directed as to how they should select the room in which to prepare the feast. They would find a man carrying a pitcher of water.

This might seem rather an indefinite identification, since on this particular day the water for the Passover feast was carried by men instead of women, and there were doubtless many men going on similar errands at that time. But the same power that enabled Jesus to foresee and reveal the particular man who should direct them, brought them to this particular man and, following him, they found the room that Christ had selected for the Last Supper.

There has been considerable conjecture as to the home of this room was a part. It is thought to have been the house of Mark's father; any rate, it was the dwelling place of some one friendly to the Messiah and therefore willing that He should observe the feast there with His disciples.

A Supreme Moment.

It was an occasion forever memorable in the history of the church and the supreme moment in the lives of eleven of the guests; to Judas it was the last opportunity for repentance before it was eternally too late.

Here were the chosen vessels into which Christ had been pouring His spirit—instruments through which He was to transform the world. What a vision the Saviour had of the gigantic task which He entrusted to these plain men, called from the ordinary labor of the day to the extraordinary of the Kingdom! What a vision of the future! What a vision of the redemption of the world! What a vision of the resurrection and the unfolding history of the centuries to follow!

Jesus' Friends.

He invited these "friends"—in the 15th verse of the 19th chapter of John He explained to them why He would call them not servants, but friends—to gather about the table with Him and solemnize the last breaking of bread.

There was no formality save the prayer that always preceded the meal. He was alone with them and the humblest of the group—Lord of Lords and King of Kings, and yet suggesting no thought of superiority.

On the contrary, we are told that He washed the feet of those who were to be His friends, and that when they had neglected this formality, He came from the throne of God, took upon Him human form and was about to return to the Father, but He was the modest host setting an example of service.

He frankly confessed to them that He looked forward with eager anticipation to this hour: "With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer," adding that it was the last "until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God."

He took the bread and, after giving thanks, broke it and gave it to them, saying, "This is my body which is given for you."

He brings vividly before them the sacrifice which He is about to make: His body was to be broken for them and for all mankind, for all who are willing to accept Him as their Redeemer.

This Simple Beginning.

And the cup was likewise passed, christened as "the new testament in My blood, which is shed for you."

The supper was to be observed in memory of Him. The old Passover feast commemorated the saving of the firstborn of the Israelites when the angel of death visited the homes that had not been marked with the blood of a lamb; the last supper was to commemorate the saving of a world by the blood of the Redeemer.

From this simple and obscure beginning, the observance of this sacrament has spread until hundreds of millions meet at stated intervals and partake together of the bread and of the cup. While every Christian should at all times be mindful of the sacrifice made by Christ and of the service that He rendered, contemplation of these things is more serious and ear-

Things New and Old About the Bible Introduction to Old Testament Study

BY REV. W. P. KING, Pastor First Methodist Church, Gainesville, Ga.

To make a study of introduction to Old Testament study is a task requiring some tact and carefulness.

I would not willingly wound the feelings of any who may not share my views.

There have been great changes in the last 50 years in ideas of the Old Testament. The scholarship of the world has been focused on the Old Testament. There has been a shifting of our viewpoint. Our high school pupils today receive scientific instruction concerning the age of the earth and the process of creation which are opposed to notions of a former generation.

The alternative today is not between a skeptical view of the Bible and a rational view of the historical theories of inspiration and revelation. The old traditional view is completely discredited. The issue is between a radical and scientific scholarship on the one hand and a sane and reverent Christian scholarship on the other hand.

It is needless to say that in so far as our own faith and allegiance is concerned, I cling to the latter class. "We may expect new light to continually break forth from God's word."

But new information and new light do not change an abiding reality. More has been learned about electricity in the last 25 years than in all the thousands of years gone before, but electricity is the same mysterious element today as it was when it flashed forth in the first thunder storm of the world.

Light is better understood than ever before, but light itself is the same today as it was in the dawn of the first morning.

In recent years we have learned many things about the atmosphere, but it is the same today as when it first wrapped the earth in its soft mantle of life.

No the great saving truth of the Old Testament abides forever. No conclusions of the Christian scholarship of modern science, if the Bible is a revelation of the human duty, or change the lessons of human duty.

But there have been changes in our theories and notions about the universe.

The Need Today.

The need for the Bible does not decrease with the passing years; man's nature has not changed.

Human institutions do not purge man of his inborn tendency to sin; the universe, notwithstanding its advantages, increases rather than decreases the opportunities for wrongdoing and adds strength to the temptations that were hard enough to resist in older times.

While opportunities for service have been multiplied by improved means of communication, opportunities to do wrong have been multiplied in the same ratio. Even education, when turned to crime, makes the sinner more powerful for harm. The moral ruler must be enlarged to suit the size of the intellectual ship or the risks of disaster are multiplied.

There is no morality except that which rests upon religion. We can hardly count on moral who abstains from injuring others merely for fear of being punished. Respect for others' rights must come from within if it is to be effective in producing righteous conduct; love is infinitely more coercive than mere respect for others' rights.

Partaking of the Sacrament.

When the Christian partakes of the sacrament, he is distressed if his memory chides him with crucifying Christ afresh; he prays for forgiveness, with the comforting assurance that true repentance meets God's requirements.

Like the prodigal son, he finds the Father not angry with him, but ready to forgive, and the relief that he finds in the sense of freedom from the burden that he has borne leads him to pray that he may live more worthily in the future.

When we realize the shortcomings even of those who avail themselves of the searching experiences that accompany the taking of the sacrament, we wonder at the indifference—even the pride and self-confidence—of those who rely upon their own strength to withstand the overpowering temptations that come at every step. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"

The Betrayer's Part.

One verse of our text contains a thought that deserves more than a passing notice. The fact that Christ's death was an indispensable part of the plan of salvation—and truly the Son of Man goeth, as it was determined—did not excuse Judas for his part in the carrying out of the plan. Having received the blood money, Judas could not count himself a divine instrument employed for the effecting of a world's redemption. Good often comes out of evil, but the men who do the evil are judged according to the character of their conduct and not according to the results that come in spite of them.

"We unto that man by whom the (Christ) is betrayed" is the condemnation passed upon all who do wrong even when God uses the wrong for the carrying out of His plan. "The wrath of man shall praise thee," God makes the sins of men, even so depraved a sin as that of Judas, to praise Him.

The experience of Judas is characteristic of the criminal. He is sometimes overcome by remorse and seeks death as a relief from the burden that he is carrying. Christians should consider to what extent the guilt of Judas is shared by those who while professing the name of Christ, betray Him by lives inconsistent with the teachings of the Saviour.

A Great Moral Truth.

Following the verses embodied in our text, are numerous incidents which have vitally affected the course of Christianity. Not least among these are the use Christ made of a manifestation of selfish ambition among some of the twelve, "which of them should be accounted the greatest." A grievous fault opened the way for the enunciation of one of the greatest moral truths bequeathed by Jesus unto men. "Let him that is chief be as he that doth serve," as the revised version has it. Christ emphasized this by declaring, "I am among you as he that serveth."

Service is the measure of greatness, and it is the measure, also, of happiness. God has linked our happiness to our virtue and our prosperity to our righteousness. Christ, in revealing God to man, revealed the law of service by which one can achieve greatness and secure happiness.

Old Testament, changes as to the motive and purpose of its revelation, changes as to date and authorship of different books.

Bishop J. J. Tigert, in an address at Third Ecumenical Methodist conference in London, said: "We are not called upon for a final judgment; many things remain in doubt; some of the materials will probably always remain in doubt. But the main problems, such as those of the Hexateuch and the Isaiah, appear to have been satisfactorily solved, and amid considerable differences of details, there is essential agreement among the greater critics as to methods, grounds and results."

So far as I can see there is no reason to anticipate such a reaction from an rejection of the historical criticism of the Old Testament, as befell the Tubingen criticism of the New; for that criticism was essentially an attempt to rewrite history on the basis of Hegelian a priori philosophy. There is nothing common to these two schools and epochs of criticism, and it is unsafe to the last degree to argue from the facts which overlook one to a kindred overthrow which must speedily befall the other.

Difficulties of Faith.

The progressiveness of the Revelation—Jesus said, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear."

There are two extreme errors concerning the Old Testament. The first is, to leave it without any authoritative truth; the second is to make it equally advanced with the new.

But as we find the law of accommodation in dealing with the childhood of the race, just as in dealing with the childhood of the individual, some truths are not to be told a child. As we study the Old Testament we see from the human side of a progressive development, from the divine side, progress revelation. Step by step God has made Himself known to man.

This progress may be noted as we observe some three features of the imperfection of the Old.

First, there is the wall of hopelessness and complaint on the part of some of the highest of Old Testament saints against the providence of God.

Second, there is the revengeful spirit in much of the Old Testament church are beyond all question, and this is sufficient.

As regards authorship, some of the books nobody has ever claimed to know who wrote them, and if we have been mistaken as touching the authors of some of the books, nothing is injured.

There may have been several authors of some of the books instead of one, but we only have that many more inspired men.

We are not to expect as fully developed doctrine in the Old Testament as in the New.

The doctrine of the kingdom of God is not in the Old Testament what it is in the New. Jesus had to correct some Old Testament conceptions.

The doctrine of immortality is not in the Old Testament what it was in the New. It was gradually revealed.

It has been a vain effort to make the Bible an equal book. Jesus and the apostles recognized the imperfections of much of the Old Testament. Let us take some typical examples of moral development of the New Testament over the Old.

Abraham comes out from an idolatrous nation. He is condemned for his absolute obedience to the will of God as he understands it. But God teaches him that human life is not to be sacrificed after the manner of heathen nations.

The ancient command to slaughter women and children was an imperfect understanding of the will of God. The character of God was not unknown until revealed in Jesus Christ. The Imprecatory Psalms fall below the spirit of the New Testament.

Purpose of Revelation.

The Revelation is strictly religious. We do not use it as a text book on science or the various branches of human knowledge. If it had been a text book it would have taught us medicine, first of all, as that is the most useful science.

It is not to teach us how the heavens go but how to go to heaven! We are to judge the Bible by its purpose. Here is the absolute end here is the ultimate end. It is to reveal to us the nature of God, of man, of duty, the most important matters which we would ever have found out. The special object of the Bible is to save men's souls, not to provide facts about science or ancient history.

The progressiveness of the Revelation—Jesus said, "first the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear."

There are two extreme errors concerning the Old Testament. The first is, to leave it without any authoritative truth; the second is to make it equally advanced with the new.

But as we find the law of accommodation in dealing with the childhood of the race, just as in dealing with the childhood of the individual, some truths are not to be told a child. As we study the Old Testament we see from the human side of a progressive development, from the divine side, progress revelation. Step by step God has made Himself known to man.

This progress may be noted as we observe some three features of the imperfection of the Old.

First, there is the wall of hopelessness and complaint on the part of some of the highest of Old Testament saints against the providence of God.

Second, there is the revengeful spirit in much of the Old Testament

David leaves a dying command against the life of Joab.

Third, there is a national exclusiveness in much of the Old Testament and a failure to comprehend the universal grace of God.

The historical basis of Revelation.—Here we have a contract with all false religions and their claims.

The Koran claims to be a sudden revelation, and not the expression of the growth of a historical movement, and so with the book of Mormon. But in the Old Testament a nation is selected to work out in their history a religious faith for the world.

But the history comes before the record.

Life comes before the literature. Religion comes before the Scriptures and the Scriptures are a record of the religious life and faith of the people. These are not to be confused. The history of a nation is not to be confused with the life of the nation. It is simply the record of national life.

Inspiration of Revelation.

The Old Testament was written by men who gave expression to their religious experience. Their literature was the expression of the religious experience. So it was entirely different from the literature of the other nations. It quickens conscience, makes men conscious of the terrible reality of sin, humbles the proud, leads us to help the weak and comfort the sorrowing. This is why Coleridge said "The Bible is inspired because it finds me at a greater depth of my being than any other book."

This is why Moody said, "I know that the Bible is inspired because it inspires me."

VII.

The Abiding Religious Elements of the Old Testament Revelation.

Let nothing that I have said of the superiority of New Testament over the Old keep you from realizing the everlasting value of the Old Testament to religious life and faith. Jesus taught clearly that the noon day of revelation comes through Him, yet His own religious life was nourished and developed by His devout study of the Old Scriptures.

The apostles who acknowledged Christ as the one supreme religious authority were nourished on the spiritual truth of the Old Testament.

First, there is the conception of God.

There is one God.

Here is the great contribution. It is not whether the world was created in six literal days, but that God created it. This is against the idolatry of surrounding nations. God is personal. He is separate from the world. He is the world, yet above the world. This is against pantheism.

The following article was written: God is good, and merciful toward His creatures. This is against the pessimism and hopelessness of life. God is all-powerful, and is able to carry on His purposes of love and good-will to men. God is all-wise and is ruling the world with a divine plan and purpose.

This is the great value of the first chapters of Genesis that the surrounding nations of the times knew nothing about.

At last there are two distinct theories of the universe. It is an affair of chance or of purpose. Which is the more reasonable?

Second, there is the conception of

Does the Radio Menace the Theater?

BY AUGUSTUS THOMAS, Famous Playwright and Author

The recent broadcasting of John McCormack and Legeria Bort in New York brings another competitor to the legitimate stage. Many managers are in wild alarm over a new menace. Augustus Thomas, dean of the drama, tells why the theaters will emerge triumphant.

Friends of the drama, including managers who produce plays are periodically agitated by the coming of some new device for entertainment which in their apprehension is to supplant the spoken play. Just at present the radio is the bugaboo.

Many of us remember the alarm of that kind caused by the perfecting of the phonograph, but that, of course, considering the radio only as an apprehended competitor of the play and not as a medium for it. The radio projection of a current play or opera is a presentation so broken and mutilated as to be fatal to either subject when regarded as advertising. Also, nothing of the above optimism is meant to refer to instrumental music or detached songs. Somebody's restaurant orchestra or studio vocalist can by repetition soon wear out the desire or even the toleration for any so-called number.

It was about the year 1913 that Mr. Daniel Frohman began to present motion pictures of famous plays in well-known plays. There were at once predictions, some of them in New York editorials, that the screen would soon completely supplant the spoken play. But in New York perhaps a majority of the modern playhouses devoted to the spoken drama have been built since 1913. The picture did take patrons from the play, but nearly altogether from the gallery, and there is reason to believe that even those patrons would have continued with the play if the 25-cent gallery had not been abolished. Willard Mack in his stirring play, "Kick In," has a soubrette say in effect, "that after seeing a fellow take a girl in his arms a hun-man, made in the image of God. He is distinct from the lower animals in language, in largeness of reasoning power, in the possibility of endless growth. Man possesses a moral and spiritual nature, and freedom of will. The reality of sin is a turbulent stream that flows through Israel's history. Man has a capacity for fellowship with God. "He saw that it was good." It was His creation and good. It was not inherently evil and antagonistic to God's nature.

The word is the garment of God. It is permeated with divine purpose, and wrought with divine intelligence. In the fourth place despite the helpless laments of many saints, there is revealed a religion of hope.

The golden age of the Jewish people was in the future.

The Messianic hope was divinely foreshadowed in "the seed of the woman." Speedy expectations were disappointed, and there was the mingling of faith and disappointment.

But there is the abiding hopefulness of the gospel. And so in the fullness of Christian light our hopefulness is to be stronger and more radiant.

This hope is to persist against all opposition, and to rejoice in the better day that is coming to the world.

THE OLDEST NATIONAL BANK IN THE COTTON STATES

Georgia—Land of Opportunity

WHEN, in 1918, the government called for an increased farm production, Georgia responded with agricultural products valued at $590,000,000. This figure was exceeded by only four states in the Union.

With Georgia's soil and climatic advantage and with farmers who know the necessity of live stock and a crop program diversified enough to make every farm produce food-stuffs to feed the farmer and his live stock, there is every reason to believe that Georgia will soon again rank among the first agricultural states.

With rural Georgia producing as it can produce, the cities of Georgia will prosper as never before. Atlanta, because of its

D. W. GRIFFITH'S LATEST 'ISN'T LIFE WONDERFUL'

Howard Theater Has Great Picture With New Star.

D. W. Griffith has given the pendulum of the motion picture another push. When years ago, he revolutionized the screen by producing "The Birth of a Nation," the first full-length picture ever made, he started the pendulum swinging in the direction of massive mobs and gigantic "sets." He showed that pictures were an ideal vehicle for emotions en masse, for brilliant pageantry, and drama on a grand scale. He invented a whole bagful of methods to impress his drama on the minds of the spectators, the "flash-back," the "revert-back," and a score more. With "Broken Blossoms," he gave another tilt to the pendulum by transferring to the screen a brief but intensely dramatic tale, one which dealt with human emotions in the individual instead of the mass. But even here, it was sheer beauty he brought to picture surroundings, the beauty which his genius brought to vivid but exotic characters which succeeded. In his latest picture, "Isn't Life Wonderful," which is the attraction at the Howard this coming week, he has revolutionized all previous ideas of picturedom by returning to life itself, plain, stark, simple human emotion in the most commonplace surroundings. He has pictured love, not the love of the great or the unusual, but the love of everyday folk. He has pictured the life, not of startling figures, but the life of the workaday man and his mind. "Isn't Life Wonderful" does not appeal to any particular set or kind of people. Because it appeals to all. It is filled with beauty, it is replete with humor, which requires a mind keen to wit to understand. It is the beauty of life itself. The humor of real human beings. It is the first picture in which human interest sustains the entire interest, unaided by exotic surroundings, by brilliant scenery, by lovely gowns, by actors and actresses doing their painful utmost to appear beautiful. Critics have classed it unanimously as even greater achievement than "The Birth of a Nation" or "Broken Blossoms." Carol Dempster and Neil Hamilton, made famous in Griffith's "America," are the two leading characters in "Isn't Life Wonderful," their appearances as the two poverty-stricken lovers who depict a love story never before seen on the screen. Selections from the "Bohemian Girl" will be played by the Howard Symphony orchestra as an overture, with Alex. Keese conducting. The comedy will be enhanced by the playing of Klavier Klavins. Mr. Fraser, piano soloist of the orchestra, will be featured, accompanied by the Howard orchestra. This number is an original composition of Earl Foretich, a prominent member of Atlanta's musical colony. The feature picture, "Isn't Life Wonderful," is scored around several themes, the most prominent of which is "Love's Old Sweet Song," used as the love theme. Goldmark's "Rustic Wedding Symphony," "Andantino," from Tchaikovsky's Fourth Symphony, the "Earl King" by Schubert and popular folk tunes form the nucleus of a very beautiful musical setting. The news reel and other features will be carefully scored to popular jazz numbers.

AT THE MOVIES

REGINALD DENNY STAR IN BIG RIALTO PICTURE

"Two heads are better than one," President Carl Laemmle, of Universal Pictures, quoted recently. "Therefore," he explained, "two stars are better than one—at certain times, provided the story is big enough to give them each the opportunities of his or her temperament."

As a result, Reginald Denny, the amiable athletic former operatic star, and charming young Laura La Plante, the most recent Universal stellar find, were cast together in even bigger roles than they played last winter in "Sporting Youth."

This combination made such a big hit with the public at large, as the letters from readers of Carl Laemmle's Saturday Evening Post article attested, as well as the enthusiasm shown by the critics, that Laemmle suggested to his production executives to seek a story which would fully embrace the abilities of a Denny-La Plante combination.

Showing at Rialto.

The best of orders will not always bring immediate results in obtaining the much-needed story for many reasons. Then it was that some one suggested George Barr McCutcheon's "The Husband of Edith." Half a dozen copies were submitted, and the next day, when half a dozen reports were submitted, Director William B. Selzer, who made "The Law Forbids" with Baby Peggy, was immediately selected to direct the Denny-La Plante production under the title of "The Fast Worker."

Manager W. T. Murray, of the Rialto theater, booked this Universal picture and will give it the first local production this week at his Rialto theater.

McCutcheon, who is one of the most popular authors in America, has had few books to equal this work as a best seller. It has gone through many editions and continues to sell to this very day.

Family Wished on Him.

Denny has the role of Terry Brock, the rather startled young man who suddenly discovers that he has a "wife, child, sister-in-law, nurse, maid and such on his hands, after agreeing to aid a long-lost college chum put one over on a gang of crooks. To accomplish this aid he has to journey clear across the continent—and sleep in a smoking car.

Laura La Plante plays the sister-in-law, who piques him at every opportunity.

Brook has to maintain his pose of being a good husband, but forgets himself on occasion; when he sees other young men making love to her; so much so that the busy tongues of gossips start to wag at a pace to cause the hotel management to make an investigation.

From then on his real troubles begin. His "child" is unruly, and, being smitten strongly by the fast sister-in-law, he finds himself doing things which border repeatedly on the ridiculous. Time and again he is on the verge of throwing up his "job," but the sister-in-law is too much of an attraction.

When complications make things too hot for him, the lady of his heart proves that she too is smitten with him. Then they begin a dash to elude the sheriff. Thrill piles on thrill—even more startling than "Sporting Youth," to one of the strangest climaxes ever recorded by the camera.

Also embraced on the program are "The Square Set," a telephone girl comedy; Pathe News and Whitney Hubner's musical offering.

Having finished "Red Clay" under the direction of Ernst Laemmle, William Desmond has been assigned to a new chapter play under the direction of Henry McKee. Its title is "The Ace of Spades," and it will be put in production next week at Universal City.

TOM MIX IS STAR IN LOEW'S PHOTOPLAY

Tom Mix comes to Loew's Grand theater tomorrow for a week's run in a new William Fox western production, "The Heart Buster." This picture is the fiftieth in which Mr. Fox has featured Tom, and although the title sounds mushy, you will find that the western star does not have to do it his spurs and chaps and become a gay Lothario to break the hearts of the girls.

In fact the hero has to throw caution to the winds and kidnap the justice of the peace and minister in order to prevent the girl he loves from marrying the villain. But the girls will sigh when Tom gets into action and finally lands in jail to be rescued by his wonderful little horse, Tony.

Tony, Tom's wonder horse, as usual has a very important role and the "happy ending" would have been very dismal for Tom only for Tony's timely aid.

Esther Ralston has the leading feminine role. Others in the class include Cyril Chadwick, William Courtwright, Frank Currier and Tom Wilson.

"Free To Love" Completed.

Work was finished last week on "Free to Love," which Frank O'Connor has been directing under B. P. Schulberg's supervision as a Preferred Picture. This feature, which will be released in January, is based upon an original screen story by Adele Buffington. In the cast are Clara Bow, Raymond McKee, Francis Feeney, Hallam Cooley, Winter Hall and Charles Miles.

'Sandra' Strikes at Human Appeal At Metropolitan

An absorbing study in human nature is afforded motion picture audiences in "Sandra," the first of a series of productions starring Barbara La Marr, opening tomorrow at the Metropolitan.

This picture, visualized from the novel by Pearl Doles Bell, strikes an intensely human note in the naturalness of the variety of characters which it represents.

The story is enacted in the main, by ten principal characters, all of them distinct personalities which will immediately be recognized as prototypes of the real thing by motion picture audiences.

The character of Sandra is invested with a dual personality—one woman content with the commonplaces of home and domesticity; the other, a restless, diversion-seeking type who believes that happiness lies beyond the bend in the winding road.

There is a Mate Stanley, a girl of 16 or 17, sweet, wholesome, full of fun, and to whom the world contains no evil; and, Robbie, her brother, is a typical Tarkington boy, 17, at the age where he takes himself and his clothes very seriously; while their mother, Eve Stanley, is a contented, home-loving woman, colorless and conservative. Her husband, Peter Stanley, is of the roly-poly, self-satisfied type, conventional in the extreme, and who would view as a radical departure the changing of his brand of cigars.

Stephen Winslow is a man-about-town, suave and charming, immaculately dressed, and the direct antithesis of David, husband of "Sandra," who is a simple, sport-loving, outdoor man, intensely devoted to his wife, and whose idea of a good time is fishing.

Then, we have the Reverend William J. Hapgood, a serious-minded, sincere type of young minister, more interested in his work than he is in erecting a magnificent edifice as a tribute to his money-raising powers.

In "Sandra," a First National picture, the director has presented a drama from the page of life, moving about and always acting as human beings and not puppets of the screen.

Ben Turpin in a new comedy, "The Wild Goose Chase," and Fox's Metropolitan News round out a most attractive program.

The revival of old favorites characterizes Enrico Leide's program for this week. The overture being composed of the three outstanding Victor Herbert successes, the Red Mill, the Fortune Teller and Mademoiselle Modiste. The main motif for the feature picture will evolve around the ballade "Come, Come My Hero," from the Chocolate Soldier. The comedy presentation will feature the latest Broadway synopses.

'THEIR FIRST BABY'

BIG LAUGH AT LYRIC

Miss Luckett Was Starred in Original New York Production Last Fall.

"Their First Baby," the volcano of mirth in which Miss Edith Luckett was starred in New York last fall before coming to Atlanta, is to be presented all this week at the Lyric theater, with the original leading women playing again her leading role.

The play is an absolute scream of laughter from start to finish, with comic incidents following each other in such rapid train that the onlooker has hardly a breathing spell to remember that it is only a play.

The mirth is of the irresistible "unconscious kind." Never for a moment do the players attempt to be "funny." It is all serious business for the little family and its friends, and foes, who become maddeningly upset by the mishaps of the first and only child they have.

It is the kind of comedy in which a stock company like the Lyric players is always at its best. There are no "bits" in the cast of characters. Every player has an important part in the whirlwind of comedy and it is the rapid movement of each of the players that sustains the comedy for every happy minute from beginning to end.

Alice and Henry Hazen—that is Edith Luckett and Fred Raymond—are a young married couple with an infant who is just exactly two months and 16 days old and weighs just exactly 16 pounds, two and one-half ounces. That is the kind of parents they are; they know every fractional turn of a degree in its temperature and every fractional ounce of change in its weight.

Henry believes in expert authority and gives minute instructions to wife and to nurse in the care of the baby. If the bath tub is not sterilized he has a fit; if the bottle is not heated to exactly the right temperature he paces the floor and raves.

Then baby disappears! The nurse suspects the blackhand and begins frantic search to save her favorite milkman, a suspect from prison for the kidnapping of Lorraine Bernard in the nurse's comedy character with comedy make-up and comedy lines that should be the funniest thing she has ever done.

The father suspects a neighbor, heaped to the death by a dominant wife in the person of Mabel Griffith. The policeman on the beat, Edwin Vail, has other suspicions and the poor little mother is too grief-stricken to suspect anyone.

Will Lloyd and Jack Holden, as the arch conspirators in the dastardly crime, are the worst nonplussed of all. They had intended no crime, only the execution favor to the proud father of making his baby the prize baby of a baby show.

Jack Holden is in love with the pretty aunt of the missing youngster, Marion White, and sees wedded bliss instead of wedding bells unless he retrieves the mistake, if baby could be called a mistake.

'SIMON CALLED PETER'

ATLANTA THEATRE SOON

Great Book Comes to Atlanta Stage in Play.

"Simon Called Peter," which William A. Brady brings to the Atlanta theater on Monday night, January 19, when it will begin a week's engagement with matinees Wednesday and Saturday, is a dramatization of Robert Keable's novel of the same title by Jules Eckert Goodman.

It deals with the story of Peter Graham, Church of England minister, who goes to France as a British war padre. He leaves London and his fiancée, happy to think that at last his work is going to bring him closer to his brothers in life. He meets disillusionment after disillusionment, for he suddenly finds that he himself does not know what the Forsyth want to know and that before he could reach their sordid souls, to bring a greater realization of his God to them, he must know something of the life that they lived. It is Peter's search for knowledge of this life that "Simon Called Peter" deals with. He finds that he must go down among publicans and sinners to find his own soul—but instead of publicans and sinners, he finds Julie, a Red Cross nurse, whom he begins to love more than he does his God. To Julie, too, Peter means all and it is the theme that the play, "Simon Called Peter," is based upon.

Baby Movie Stars.
(At the Forsyth.)
One of the greatest attractions in vaudeville—the personal appearance of Jane and Katherine Lee, the celebrated movie children—is going to be afforded patrons of Keith's Forsyth theater the latter part of this week.

It is with considerable pleasure that the management of the Forsyth announces the booking of this splendid act for these five stars have in their immature careers established for themselves a popularity that is world-wide and they have the distinction of being the highest paid vaudeville act on the boards today.

And only for a limited time will the speaking stage be graced by Jane and Katherine Lee. They have consented to make several new motion pictures this season and the time for work on these to start is almost at hand.

developments of the comedy contribute to much of its mirthfulness that it would not be fair to reveal all the developments that intervene between baby's disappearance and the climax of the comedy. If they do not constitute the funniest play, and make "Their First Baby" the most enjoyable play the company has presented since its return, the players will be as much surprised as they are disappointed.

Miss Luckett fits her part as the distracted young mother to absolute perfection, having been especially picked for the part out of all the leading women in New York. Fred Raymond's genius for light comedy is too well known to demand commendation. The comedy is to be presented each night this week, beginning with ladies' bargain performance Monday, and at Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday matinees.

HARRY JOLSON LEADS BIG KEITH PROGRAM

Harry Jolson, celebrated operatic blackface comedian, in an orgy of fun and laughs, will appear at Keith's Forsyth theater the first three days of this week as the headlining feature of an altogether worthwhile program of vaudeville. He is being assisted by Jerome Greene.

In addition the Forsyth also will present as a special added attraction the act of Louise Bowers, in a whirlwind, dazzling, singing and dancing revue.

In these two acts the popular theater is offering its patrons the best possible talent obtainable in vaudeville. Their appearance assures patrons of one of the most enjoyable bills seen on an Atlanta stage in a long time.

One does not have to be told that Al and Harry Jolson are brothers. They are as much alike as two peas in a pod. Harry's illustrious brother has to an extent been a handicap to him, therefore, he prefers to be just Harry Jolson himself, and not Harry Jolson, brother of Al.

Louise Bowers and her company present a somewhat different revue, called "Plenty of Pep." Songs and dances, combined with ideas, and presented with enthusiasm. Miss Bowers and her company are a quartet of specialty artists. There are comedy, eccentric dances by two of the company and an acrobatic dance by a third, and to crown it all plenty of singing by Miss Bowers herself. They conclude their act with a bit of old-time minstrelsy with several members of the company doing a specialty.

"Simon Called Peter," Coming

Meredith and Snoozer offer a most entertaining and interesting demonstration of bulldog intelligence. "Snoozer's" accomplishments are really human and there is no doubt but that the animal really thinks for himself and that Meredith is a tutor, not a trainer.

Saxton and Farrell offer a comedy sketch entitled "The Elopers." The playlet was written and is staged by Eddie Nelson and is staged by a team some real opportunity for their laugh-making purposes.

The Ruby Trio prove to be a constellation of jewels as singers, instrumentalists and dancers. They are three young women who present a combination of music and pep called "Sammies."

"Love and Sunset"

(Prologue at Howard.)

For the stage presentation at the Howard in conjunction with Griffith's "Isn't Life Wonderful," a special atmospheric prologue has been selected. This will depict a scene some where in Germany and will show the trials and tribulations of these people and refugees after the war. A beautiful setting has been arranged and Eunice Curry Prescott, soprano, and J. H. Herbert, baritone, will sing "Love's Old Sweet Song" and "Drink to Me With Thine Eyes," special orchestration having been made for these two numbers which will be enhanced in the feature picture score also. Indications point to this presentation to be one of the best seen at the Howard.

DOUBLE-STAR BILL OFFERED AT LOEW'S

Another double-headliner, with two more star Loew acts heading a bill of unusual merit, will be the offering at Loew's Grand theater this week, the vaudeville offering being topped off with a photoplay starring Tom Mix, one of the most popular actors of the silver screen today.

The Hubert Kinney Revue is first on the list with Mr. Kinney and a selection of beauties whose attractiveness lends much to their daintiness in executing some pretty and fascinating dances. The Hubert Kinney Revue is a leader in the revue line, having as snappy an arrangement of entertaining features as are seen on the vaudeville stage today. It is full of pep and life, and not a dull moment has been allowed to creep into the unfolding of this star feature of this week's vaudeville bill. Included in the cast of beauties are Gladys Peterson, Paula Lee, Ora Davis, Louise Laylor and Vera McGrath. The costumes worn in this production are things of beauty, striking in the extreme, and adding considerably to the extravagance of the act.

The second big feature on the bill, and an act that will be sure to draw the youngsters as well as the grown-ups, is "Teddy," the wrestling bear. It is a riot of fun. Teddy is thoroughly trained, in fact is one of the best trained bears appearing in public today. He is clever, too, and will do some stunts that will bring great waves of laughter. You have no doubt heard of kangaroos who box. Well, Teddy is not a boxer, but he certainly can do the "Strangler Lewis" stuff, which means that he is some wrestler, and he will prove this by taking on male opponents during the course of the act. The appearance of Teddy, the wrestling bear, will be a great novelty in the vaudeville line.

Al Wilson, the natural comedian, comes back to Atlanta on this week's bill and will offer a conglomeration of songs, dances and comedy in a novel way that is sure to please.

The Powers Duo in "A European Thriller" will show some sensational stunts in the hand balancing and acrobatic line.

Walter Brooks Picked Miss Luckett To Star In "Their First Baby"

The Lyric players secured the grand-new farce comedy, "Their First Baby," for presentation at the Lyric theater this week largely because of the authors' personal friendship for Miss Edith Luckett, leading woman of the players, who came to Atlanta fresh from the original production in New York.

Directed by Walter Brooks, director of "Plain Jane" and "Little Jessie James," Miss Luckett created the part of the leading feminine character under the guidance of the authors, Sydney Stone and Eleanor Maude Crane. The play was declared by the leading woman to be the funniest in which she ever had a part. "And the baby's mother is just so much like a real life young mother might be that she is as much fun for me to play as she seems to be to the audience," the clever little star asserted.

Walter Brooks himself selected Miss Luckett for the leading feminine role and she played it throughout the run of the comedy at the Montauk theater.

"The Foolish Virgin"

Elaine Hammerstein will come to Alamo No. 2 beginning on Monday in Thomas Dixon's startling story, "The Foolish Virgin." It is said to be full of thrills, clashes of passion and emotion, and finally the resultant happiness that comes after many bitter struggles.

Local motion picture fans will have a chance to see their favorite screen stars performing at their best in "The Foolish Virgin." Elaine Hammerstein in the lead role is ably supported by Robert Fraser, whom Pola Negri has proclaimed the screen's greatest love. The balance of the cast includes Gladys Brockwell, Phyllis Haver, Lloyd Whitlock, Irene Hunt, Howard Truesdale and others. This is a first-run picture.

For Thursday and Friday the management has scheduled another first-run subject, entitled "What Shall I Do," in which Dorothy Mackaill is starred. This is said to be a startling story of human emotions, which should satisfy every viewer. The leading players are John Harron, Louise Dresser, William V. Mong, Ann May, Ralph McCullough and John Standing.

For Saturday Harry Carey will be shown in his latest big western production, "The Flaming Forties," together with a humorous comedy, "The Telephone Girl," by H. C. Witwer.

Betty Compton has finished her current Paramount starring picture, "New Lives for Old." Director Clarence Badger ended work with Wallace MacDonald, Theodore Kosloff and Sheldon Lewis in featured roles five days before Christmas.

It's a story of wartime, in which Miss Compton appears as a celebrated French dancer who becomes involved in the French secret Service and sacrifices everything—even it appears, her great love—for her country.

The story abounds with graphic pictures of the world war, not only as it was fought in the front-line trenches, but as it was worked out by secret service agents behind the lines.

The original will be remembered as the play by Emile Augier, "The Marriage of Olympe." The screen version was written by Adelaide Heilbron.

Players To Prepare "De Luxe" Production For Convention Week

Members of the Lyric Players Dramatic Stock company are looking forward to the convention, here next week of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation with more intense interest than any others in the United States. Men who wield great power in the motion picture and theatrical business are to be in attendance and practically every one of them will see the show at one or other of the performances during the week. The player who makes a smashing impression on one of them may be suddenly lifted to world renown and stardom.

The management has arranged to give each of them an opportunity to shine brightly by picking "Blind Youth," the comedy drama that Blind Lou Tellegen famous as the production for the week. Fred Raymond will have the part Tellegen played for several years, longer than any other modern actor ever played in any other modern play.

Betty Compton.

(At the Palace.)

A brilliant array of screen celebrities will be seen in "Miami," a great society drama, which will be shown at the Palace theater, Inman Park, Monday and Tuesday. Betty Compton is the featured player. She plays the part of the modern girl who smokes, drinks, flirts and never takes a dare. The scenes of the picture are set in Miami, Fla., and it is a colorful story of the gilded set who play each winter at this famous resort.

Harry Carey, in "Roaring Rails" and "The Pilgrims," a three-reel educational subject, form a double feature program for Wednesday. "Roaring Rails" is described as a thrilling picture of railroad life and the great outdoors, and is said to be the most spectacular production in which Harry Carey has ever appeared.

"Her Cross Was Worn," in which beautiful Helen Chadwick is the star, will be the feature attraction at this theater Thursday and Friday. Manager Fowler announces that this picture has never been shown in Atlanta before.

"Just Off Broadway" is the title of Saturday's feature, and it is said to be one of the most entertaining films of the season.

A new and mirthful comedy will be shown each day in addition to the regular feature picture.

Al Jolson's Brother Here.

If a book of synonyms embodied the word "Jolson" it would show beside it—"fun," "laughs," "jokes" and "merit."

The famous Al Jolson is one reason for that. His brother, Harry, is another. Harry is an "operatic black-face comedian." And in vaudeville circles he enjoys a reputation that falls but little short of Al's.

So when Harry appears at Keith's Forsyth theater as the headlining attraction the first three days of this week, he will do so as no unfamiliar figure to Atlantans. They have seen him work before and having seen him, have enjoyed him to a hilarious uproar. That's a characteristic of the Jolson duo, although their style of entertaining is vastly different.

Ben Alexander, 12, who plays the youthful George Minnie in Vitagraph's "Pampered Young Man," Smith's picture of Booth Tarkington's "The Magnificent Ambersons," is 100 per cent boy. William Fildes II, the tennis champion, has adopted him as his mascot and the two are great pals.

AFTER the excitement of getting moved over into the New Year we look out the window and here is Spring traveling steadily this way . . . and though many travel to Florida for the interim, as many more don Spring attire at home. . . The new coats for Spring divide their attention to materials between Charmeen and Downy-Wave, the new Spring fabric of soft surface, narrow wale crosswise weave.

ANOTHER BEAUTIFUL GEORGIA GIRL WINS SUCCESS ON STAGE

Miss Sara Alexander Is Now Taking Part With Hampden Players

BY BESSIE S. STAFFORD

Miss Sara Alexander spent her childhood play-acting in Augusta and its vicinity.

And now we hear of her professional fortunes being cast with the Walter Hampden players. She is in the cast of "Cyrano de Bergerac," Edmund Rostand's creation, and one of the most famous New York successes, which, after a long Broadway run, is on tour of the largest cities in the country. In the parlance of Broadway, Miss Alexander "hasn't gone on the stage." She's there!

The Theater magazine recently gave a full page layout to beautiful pictures of this Georgia girl. Her stage debut, made with such a strong company and play, is a real achievement for Miss Alexander, who is barely 22 years old. Last winter she led a real butterfly life, flitting to all the parties and balls in Augusta and Atlanta. This winter she is seriously engaged in carving out a career. Down in Augusta they say she has always been stage-struck. Here in Atlanta her friends who knew her at Washington Seminary tell of wonderful artistry and dramatic ability. Her debut into leading theatrical circles is rather amazing for one's first engagement. She's associated with a fine array of Thespians, and contact with these players will prove invaluable to this ambitious talented girl, who has lovely feminine charm and social graces. She's a marvelously graceful dancer, too. After studying dramatic art in the national capital, Miss Alexander went to New York and to be coached by Ned Wayburn, the wizard who is going to train our Atlanta Junior leaguers for their 1925 follies.

Rostand's "Cyrano" has another interesting person in its cast who appears on the program as Jay Fasset. He is none other than J. Sloan Fasset, Jr., son of that distinguished New York statesman whose name he bears and brother of Mrs. Fred G. Hodgson, of Atlanta. As a translator of modern drama in the romance languages, Mr. Fasset is quite renowned in the east and is helping Walter Hampden to make "Cyrano de Bergerac" an epoch-making production.

Radio Redline Story.

Mr. and Mrs. Veazy Rainwater gave up going to a dance on New Year's eve to remain at home with their handsome sons, Veazy, Jr., Brown, Crawford and Baby Lupton, aged 3.

The new radio, a much appreciated Christmas present from the boys to Mr. Rainwater and installed in the Druid Hills home proved the attraction for the evenings.

Radio casting has indeed reached sublime heights when Atlantans can register forty-eight patriotic thrills, as did the Rainwaters when our blessed old Liberty Bell pealed forth in Philadelphia from the tower of Independence hall proudly proclaiming to a nation of peaceful listeners that this is "the land of the free, and the home of the brave." They also heard the musical bells on old Trinity church in New York, more than a thousand miles away, chime the melodies which seeped clearly through the air to the ears of these Atlantans.

This was not all that reached the Rainwater home that evening. They tuned in on the first New York concert of John McCormack and Lucrezia Zori, internationally famous artists. It stands out as one of the most beautiful programs ever sent over the radio, and the soprano of the Metropolitan Opera company and famous tenor sang into the microphone such familiar airs as "La Paloma," "When Love Is Kind" and "Addio Del Passato" from "La Traviata," sung by Boris McCormack sang "Marchetta," "Mother Machree" and "All Alone."

Dancing is one of the favorite amusements of members of the Rainwater family, so when tureful and inspiring airs floated from the amplifier it became a mad race among the fine gentlemen to see who would claim Mrs. Rainwater for a partner. As she expressed it, "For once in my life I was the only belle at the ball."

Acts With Walter Hampden Players

Miss Sara Alexander, of Augusta, Ga., who is prominently known in Atlanta, is a member of the famous Walter Hampden Players, and is appearing in "Cyrano de Bergerac."

his personality? That's the question you'll ask yourself when his, lovable Paul Whiteman comes to us in person at the auditorium this week. Somehow, from the moment his beaming smile flashes across the footlights there is a sort of palship existing between audience and conductor. Paul Whiteman, known to theatergoers everywhere, has several fascinating mannerisms. He directs his orchestra and marks time with a pat of his right foot and the perfect ease in his trousers. This king of American rhythmic jazz seems drenched with the spirit of entertainment, his subtle art always featuring a member of his orchestra rather than himself. There we have the secret of his remarkable success.

Dr. Barrett's Honors.

Dr. Kate Waller Barrett, of Virginia, distinguished mother of Mrs. Edward Barrett, is the most widely-known woman in Virginia.

It is said that when the governor of the Old Dominion has the task of selecting a woman to represent the state or of appointing a woman member on a state commission the honor always falls upon Dr. Barrett, who is as well known among the women's organizations in Europe as America. It seems hardly possible that this wonderful woman, known far and wide among philanthropists and socialists, reared as she was in the carefully guarded surroundings of her father's old Virginia estate, had never been permitted to venture eleven miles away from home and visit Stafford county courthouse. When at 18 she accepted the young rector of the Protestant Episcopal church, Rev. Robert Southey Barrett, she based her acceptance on two conditions. One was that Dr. Barrett should take her to see this historic old courthouse and the other was that he carry her to the circus. Those of us who remember and loved Dr. and Mrs. Barrett when they resided in Atlanta during the former's rectorship at St. Luke's Episcopal church, when that edifice stood at the corner of Houston and Peach streets, can readily believe that he fulfilled those requests. She says her own philosophy of life is based on three fundamentals: Bread, Beauty and Brotherhood. At 67 years old Dr. Barrett is beautiful and aristocratic. She is one of the best informed women in America.

Mrs. Barton Gives Party for Son.

Mrs. R. L. Barton entertained at her home on Park avenue at a lovely party Tuesday, January 6, in honor of the fourth birthday of her little son, Bobby, Jr. The home was beautifully decorated in a color scheme of green and red. The Christmas tree, with its gay lights, was an object of delight to the little guests.

Drop the handkerchief and other juvenile games were played. A contest in which the little folks pinned the cap on the clown was an interesting feature. Charles Wynn won first prize, a box of stationery, and little Thelma McArthur received the "booby," a box of handkerchiefs.

In the dining room, festoons of crepe paper were twined around the chandelier and caught to the four corners of the table. There were baskets with little parasols containing red and green mints. The favors were unusually novel, consisting of tiny roosters, birds and geese. The birthday cake, holding its red burning candles, was in the center of the table. Ice cream and cake were served. The hostess was assisted in entertaining by Miss Mildred Barton and Mrs. J. F. Redding. Those present were: Hunter Jordan, Carlyle Carden, Jenny Ray, Frank Redding, Evelyn Bethoa, Thelma and Buddy McArthur, Sunny Bey Williams, Yvonne and William Barrow, J. C. Charles Wynn, Louie Hickman, Harold Hickman, Anne Catherine Leonard, June Campbell, Mrs. C. S. Wynn, Mrs. N. C. Carden, Mrs. W. H. Bethoa, Mrs. William Barrow, Mrs. Jack McArthur and Mrs. N. W. Mrs. J. B. Brooks read one of O. Henry's Christmas stories in her usual pleasing manner.

Two beautiful vocal selections were rendered by Mrs. L. E. Rogers to the delight of all present.

Mrs. J. B. Brooks was the winner of the prize in a very enjoyable contest.

The Importance of Clothes

There is an old Danish proverb that says, "As a man dresses, so is he esteemed." Next to food, clothes are the most important thing we buy. If clothes are so important, surely their upkeep, or laundering, must be equally so.

Then why not give this vital element at least as much consideration as we do their purchase?

That is what your laundry would like to have you do. Take time to investigate how it launders your clothes. See how science has devised perhaps a score of new processes—all based on clean, clear water and mild white soap—to make your clothes last longer.

See how your laundry has eliminated the wearing washboard and wringer of the old-fashioned washerwoman. Visit and see for yourself its light, airy plant, flooded with sunshine, and spotlessly clean.

If you will do that, you will be sure to send the family clothes to the Laundry, and if you send them to the laundry regularly, you will cut down a big item of clothes expense. Your laundry has a family wash service that will just suit you.

Mrs. Turman, Head of Women Voters, Calls Meeting Tuesday

Mrs. R. L. Turman, newly elected president of the Atlanta League of Women Voters, announces a call meeting of the board of directors, the ward chairmen and committees Tuesday morning, January 13, at 10:30 o'clock sharp.

This meeting is of great importance, as plans will be perfected for the big annual meeting of the entire membership of the league, which is to take place at one of the large hotels, where an all-day session will be held, with a luncheon, during the third week in January. Reports will be made from the different committees appointed to arrange the activities of the meeting, and final plans laid to carry off the meeting in a way to insure the pleasure of those attending.

"This is to be more of a social conference than a business meeting," Mrs. Turman says, "and I want every member of the league to be present to greet the new officers, and wish us success. We members of the board want to feel the membership of the league back of us, and this will be the opportunity for them all to give us the glad hand. This is to be a big year for the league, but if it is to be a success, everyone must come to the front and give us their aid."

Mrs. R. L. Turman, president of the Atlanta League of Women Voters, wishes to announce that the constitution of the state league provides that the Atlanta league may send 35 delegates to the state convention to be held in Rome, January 29-30-31. A few women who are going to the convention have turned their names in at headquarters, but Mrs. Turman urges that many more plan to go, and those who are going must advise the office so that they may be formally made delegates and given the necessary credentials by Mrs. Turman as soon as possible.

A very unique plan has been started by Miss Eleanor Raoul, chairman of organization of the Georgia league, who is planning to go to the convention in her automobile. She has engaged seats in her car to some of the women who are going to the convention from Atlanta. Others in the city, in College Park, Decatur, Athens and Cartersville have taken up the plan, and out of this has grown the name of "The Convention caravan," which will start from Atlanta and pick up others on the way to Rome.

Mrs. Turman urges that all who can go to the convention and furnish a car, notify the league headquarters, so that plans may be completed for the "caravan." The program for the convention, which has been published in an earlier edition of the papers, and will appear in the January issue of the Pilgrim, consists of a debate on the Child Labor amendment and the formal presentation of the sterling silver loving cup, as a prize to the local league in the state of Georgia whose percentage in voting holds the greatest increase in former years. This cup is one of the most magnificent of its kind in the state of Georgia, and is owned by the Georgia League of Women Voters.

Ruth goes Shopping

"How come we have only new bath towels these days?" Father inquired.

"What do you mean?" Mother asked, pausing as she turned from the linen closet. Father stood in the bath room door with a soft, fluffy bath towel in his hands, and Mother had several equally soft, thick towels thrown across her arm to carry into Ruth's bath room.

"You must have bought a car-load of bath towels and not using any that have been laundered. I haven't suffered from a single scratchy towel in weeks."

"Oh, it's all due to the new method being used by the Guthman Laundry. At first I thought they were going out and buying me a new lot of towels. I didn't recognize my old towels when they came in, they were so new looking. I was so curious about it I even drove by the plant to learn how Guthman succeeded in taking such good care of bath towels. You know my club work has taught me to get at the bottom of things. My visit was welcomed and I was taken on an inspection tour of the plant, to see with my own eyes the rejuvenating process my old bath towels experience."

"Instead of being run through ironers that stiffen and harden every thread and turn the towel into a scratching machine they are dried on a 'tumbler' as are all wool blankets and other articles where softness and thickness are preserved."

"I saw a sheet of letters from big manufacturers congratulating Guthman Laundry on having put into operation the proper method for bath towels. The manufacturers wrote that the new way will triple the wearing qualities of bath towels as under the old ironing process the threads were constantly broken and crushed, and the towel turned from a soft, water absorbent article into a scratchy and sometimes into a cutting apparatus."

"Gracious!" Father exclaimed. "I had suspected you of spending your days looking for bargains in towels and I find instead I am being saved money by Guthman Laundry. Certainly Guthman Laundry takes remarkable care of my shirts and can be relied on to send them in with all their buttons on."

"Yes," Mother answered, "Guthman Laundry really does give first-class service."

BY M. FRANCES MEADORS
BURGHARD.

"Unquestionably, in the acute moral struggle of today the best defense of the eighteenth amendment is an aggressive campaign for law observance and the enforcement of its provisions. And this is the only way to win the deeply ingrained, home-loving, women-loving support of the American people with this fact as we win them to our gleaming standard. Together we have covenanted that during 1925 we will emphasize all phases of our department's work, and we will endeavor to rally the youth of our colleges and communities; that we will do our utmost to win a million children to sing our songs, shout our slogans and understand and obey the law. We will salute the flag with patriotic salute. Only thus can we be true to the holy obligation and inheritance that is ours and for which daily we thank God. Only thus can a great host of youth and children be impressed with the meaning of the eighteenth and nineteenth amendments."

The Boulevard Park auxiliary held its regular meeting in December at the home of Mrs. J. A. Walker, on Cresthill avenue.

Mrs. Walker brought to the attention of the club the proposed team tracks to be built by the Southern Railway company on the east side of Piedmont park, near the Boys' High school. She stressed the importance of preserving and protecting our public playgrounds and beauty spots, as well as our schools, against such detrimental encroachment.

The retiring president, Mrs. Walker, thanked the members for the harmonious

Mrs. Wolfe thanked the members of the auxiliary for the compliment and honor bestowed upon her as president, pledging her best efforts in the interest of the club and its object. "Every woman," she said, "should be a citizen, naturally, desired earnestly that the world's—her children and other people's children—shall have to live in shall be a better, safer and happier place than it is now."

to a higher plane of life, and their efforts toward that end have become a mighty telling force. It gives me great pleasure to see trivialities fast losing their place and the serious attention the women of today are giving to the big things in life—the truly worth while things."

Mrs. N. A. Hughes, the newly installed second vice president, proposed the bestowal of honorary life membership upon Mrs. L. F. Dreyfus, in whose heart the idea of a woman's club for Boulevard Park was born. Mrs. Dreyfus was the first president of the auxiliary. The proposal met with unanimous approval.

The club pledged a donation to the

As a token of love and admiration to the members, Mrs. J. A. Walker, the retiring president, was presented with a beautiful hand-painted platter. Miss Helen Swann, the retiring secretary, whose faithful service and untiring efforts has won for her the love and gratitude of the members of the club, was given a surprise shower—this being her birthday also.

A musical program was then rendered by Miss Dorothy Tumlin, Miss Sutton and Mr. Laing, during which time tea was served and a social hour

Home Economics Department Will Meet on Wednesday

The regular monthly meeting of the home economics department of the Atlanta Woman's club will be held Wednesday, January 14, at 3 o'clock at the club house, Mrs. J. A. Carlisle, chairman, will preside and an unusual interesting program will be featured during the afternoon.

Miss Mary Olive Whitehead will be the principal speaker of the afternoon and will talk of "The Modern Trend in Decorations." Miss Whitehead is a graduate of Columbia university and has a number of new ideas to present. She needs no introduction to the women of Atlanta, as she has charge of the classes on interior decorations at the club and has established herself in the foremost ranks of the artists in the city.

E. M. Geramus, a representative of the Hoover Sweeper company, will give a short talk on the merits of that popular vacuum cleaner. The Hoover Sweeper company is one of the cook book advertisers and all housewives will be most interested in the new model of this machine, which Mr. Geramus will discuss.

An attendance prize will be drawn for by all of those who arrive promptly on time. This prize has been donated by the Henard Mayonnaise company.

Mrs. George Roberts, the cook book chairman, will conduct a discovery contest, which is always a treat to housewives, inasmuch as so many helpful household hints are discussed. The prize for this contest, a lovely cake, has been donated by the American Bakeries company.

Mrs. T. G. Delph, chairman of vocational classes, will take registrations for the new series of classes on interior decorations and millinery, which will begin at the club house, February 1. The entire course, which comprises eight lessons, is only $2 and open to the public, whether club member or not.

MISS HOGG WILL LECTURE TO CLUB MEMBERS

The citizenship department of the Atlanta Woman's club will hold its regular monthly meeting Wednesday, January 15, in the palm room of the clubhouse at 10 o'clock a. m. Miss Sara Hogg, a graduate of the University of Georgia, Washington, D. C., will speak on the "The Plan of Debt Settlement." Miss Hogg is a very interesting speaker and will interest her hearers greatly on this important subject of international affairs.

Mrs. Carl Hutcheson will talk on where the land owned by William Morris, which comprised two million acres, was situated in Georgia. New Jersey, the third state to sign the constitution, will be discussed and Mrs. Rapp will give the early history of the state. Mrs. Stockbridge will speak of its resources and its manufactures, and the three men who were delegates to the constitutional convention in 1787. Mrs. Hutcheson will also tell something of the origin and manufacture of silk.

Mrs. S. D. Farnham will give a sketch of Mrs. Martha Evans Martin, the well-known writer on nature topics and astronomer, whose home was near Watchung, N. J.

Mrs. R. M. Striplin, chairman of American citizenship for the Atlanta Woman's club, will preside over the meeting and the members of the entire club are cordially invited to attend and become affiliated with the citizenship department of the club.

Among those assisting Mrs. Striplin in this department are Mrs. John D. Evans, who does splendid work among the newly-naturalized citizens of the community and Mrs. A. G. Holmer, who assists in arranging the interesting programs placed before the members of the department. This is a large department and scores of interested workers are constantly in the field, accomplishing big things for the community.

MRS. MELTON PRESIDES AT FIRST MEETING

The literary department of the Atlanta Woman's club held its first meeting of the New Year, 1925, on January 7, at 3 o'clock in the palm room of the club, Mrs. W. F. Melton, chairman, presiding.

In response to roll call, New Year's resolutions were given; the tenor of these resolutions of the large and enthusiastic audience was to be more prompt in attendance in club and committee meetings.

Mrs. C. V. Hoenstein gave delightfully a synopsis of Edna Ferber's latest novel, "So Big." This play is now running at the Metropolitan and it is interesting to note that the

Mrs. Sharp Invites Speaker To Address Woman's Club

Mrs. Norman Sharp, president of the Atlanta Woman's club, who has invited Nelson M. Shipp, associate editor of The Macon Telegraph, who is well-versed in prison reform, to address the club on this subject at the regular meeting Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Norman Sharp, president of the Atlanta Woman's club has invited Nelson M. Shipp, associate editor of The American Telegraph, who is well-versed upon the subject of prison reform, to address the members of the club on this subject at the regular meeting Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Shipp has studied the subject from every angle and will have many suggestions to offer and incidents to relate, which show the possibilities of benefiting the prisoners in many ways by a reform movement. He is accorded to be one of the best informed students of this subject in the state and it is with much pleasure that Mrs. Sharp presents him to the club members and their friends.

A beautiful musical program has been arranged by Mrs. W. O. Chears, chairman of music for the club. Miss Ruth Debnay Smith will render several lovely violin selections, accompanied by Miss Frances Hurt, accomplished musician. Mrs. Percy Cox, instructor in piano music at Washington seminary, who spent last summer studying in New York, under the famous pianist, Clarence Adler, will give a group of selections from Chopin.

Mrs. Mary Brown, soprano, and one of Atlanta's most charming visitors, will delight the audience with a group of vocal selections. Mrs. Elizabeth Murray Shepard, noted magazine writer, will be the guest of the meeting and will give a brief talk on her prospective literary work in Georgia.

Mrs. Norman Sharp, president of the club will preside over the meeting and introduce the distinguished guests of the occasion. Mrs. Sharp is especially anxious for the members of the club to hear Mr. Shipp on "Prison Reform," as it is a splendid opportunity to become familiar with present conditions and means of improvement.

for miles. The scenic highway is a joy to the tourist, with its beauty and magnificence. Atlanta could give that same joy to the tourists as well as to its residents, by entering into this movement of making Peachtree street and Peachtree road blossom out in full splendor during the early spring months, with the pink and rose which would result in a very short time, from the planting of flowering peach trees on every lot and estate from the business section of the city, for miles out on the highways.

Those having visited Miami, Fla., will recall with what brilliancy and radiance the crimson hibiscus blooms

MRS. BOYKIN WILL PRESIDE AT LUNCHEON

Mrs. B. M. Boykin, who is so interested in placing the problems of the nation before the women of today, and who holds the office of chairman of the international relationship committee of the Atlanta Woman's club, offers one of the best opportunities to club members in arranging a most delightful luncheon for next Tuesday, when subjects of great value will be discussed.

Committees have been appointed to look after all details of the luncheon, securing the best speakers, having the banquet hall of the Woman's club beautifully decorated, a delicious menu prepared and every item which it takes to make the occasion one of interest and brilliancy.

Besides Mrs. Norman Sharp, president of the club, other speakers will be Mrs. Edgar Alexander, democratic committeewoman for Georgia; Mrs. R. L. Tving, president of the League of Women Voters; Mrs. Chauncey Smith, first recording secretary of the Atlanta Woman's club; and Mrs. T. T. Stevens, president of the City Federation of Women's Clubs. Other honor guests will be present, among them being Mrs. Clifford Walker and Mrs. Walter Sims.

Mrs. Boykin is assisted in arrangements by Mrs. Samuel P. Neely, divisional chairman of the department; Mrs. H. M. Nichols, secretary; Mrs. Hazzard, treasurer; Mrs. G. H. Brandon, committee on decorations; and Mrs. Carl Hutcheson.

The members of the club are urged to make reservations early, as this will prove one of the most interesting gatherings of clubwomen during the year and a great number of guests are anticipated. National subjects will be discussed, international relations, and the problems accompanying such relations will be brought out, and many points of especial interest to those who study governmental conditions will be explained, making this meeting of much benefit to all who attend.

Mrs. Boykin especially invites those who have been overseas recently and hopes in this way to bring out many interesting discussions that have been brought to mind by actual observation. Quite a number of the most prominent and well-versed clubwomen of the city have had recent visits to the old country and are enabled to talk on subjects which have been of vital interest to those who have studied these international questions but have not had the opportunity of getting their first hand or coming in direct contact with representatives of both home and foreign lands.

Those wishing reservations must phone the clubhouse before Monday night, since a limited number of guests can be accommodated and already reservations have been made in great numbers, according to the committee.

GYMNASIUM CLASS TO BE HELD AT WOMAN'S CLUB

One of the most interesting phases of work at the Atlanta Woman's club at this season of the year is the gymnasium classes, under the supervision of Mrs. Odette Poundstone and Mrs. Lawton Nalley. The classes are held on Mondays and Thursdays at 10 o'clock in the morning and many women are interested in the exercises.

In the near future Miss Anne Thorne, the instructor of the classes, expects to train the members in basketball, volleyball and several interesting lines of recreation, which exercise the body sufficiently and at the same time offer some special amusement to the participant.

Women who are overweight or otherwise find that through this medium a normal state of physique may be more easily obtained than by any other means and surely a much safer way of reducing as well as a much more pleasant occupation than dieting, etc. During the last of the four months' course Miss Thorne will instruct the pupils in dancing, which will naturally develop grace and poise, qualities that always improve a person, no matter what line of activities are later pursued.

Miss Thorne is a graduate of Martha Washington college and was for some years instructor in the Atlanta State Normal school at Florence. She has had much experience in instructing mature pupils in gymnasium and these classes at the Woman's club are proving of delightful interest to the members. Non-members of the club are invited to join the classes and the tuition is only $1.50 a month, with two lessons a week. Further information regarding the classes may be obtained by calling Mrs. Poundstone, Hemlock 2184-W, or Mrs. Nalley at Hemlock 7253-W.

According to Mrs. Poundstone, many other registrations may be made as the classes may be increased to several more than are at present registered and the committee wishes every member of the club to have the advantage of this highly beneficial training, which is given at an extremely small cost to the individual.

The beautifully appointed tea table was overlaid with an exquisite Venetian lace cover. A large silver basket filled with long-stemmed pink roses and narcissi graced the center of the table and pink tapers burning in silver candlesticks added to the loveliness of the table.

Mrs. Hill received her guests wearing a gown of peach colored crepe elaborately beaded in crystals.

Miss King is being lavishly entertained at a round of social gaieties during her stay.

Miss Nell Sims Is Honor Guest.

Miss Nell Sims, popular and attractive Atlanta belle, who will leave Monday for New York to make her future home, was the central figure Saturday evening at an informal buffet supper at her home on St. Charles avenue, when 20 close friends called to say good-bye.

Those who called were Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hardwick, Mr. and Mrs. Chester B. Blakeman, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Upton, Mr. and Mrs. George Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. William McKennie, Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey MacDonald, Dr. and Mrs. Duncan Owens, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Rogers, Miss Alice Stearns, Henry Walker Bagley, Forney Wyle, Ted Miller, William McCarty and Dick Peeler.

American Music to Feature Concert.

Quite a number of Atlanta devotees of music—grand opera and symphony orchestras and piano celebrities—have been busy impressing on their friends for the past week that a visit to the Paul Whiteman concert Thursday evening doesn't stamp one as a lover of "jazz," but quite the reverse.

For Paul Whiteman's efforts in musical development are being taken quite seriously by the critics and composers, who believe that he is bringing out a wholly new form of American music, and the only truly typical American music, if one excepts the Indian chants.

Mr. Whiteman organized his concert orchestra and took it on tour after three successful New York concerts to show the American public just what he is trying to do—to "take jazz out of the kitchen and into the parlor," as a leading critic wrote. He calls his program "An Experiment in American Music," and he begins with the wildest, weirdest, most discordant type of jungle jazz and shows how greatly it can be improved by proper arrangement. His program includes a suite of four serenades, written especially for him by Victor Herbert, and the "Symphony in Blue," composed for the Whiteman orchestra by George Gershwin—the first symphonic composition ever written for saxophones, flugel horns, banjos and other typically "jazz" instruments.

Atlanta has been considered peculiar in its musical tastes. It supports grand opera; it welcomes great vocal stars; it turned out one of the largest audiences in its history to hear Paiderewski. But all those appeal to a class, not the mass. So Russell Bridges, who is in charge of the local engagement, believes he will have to put some extra seats into the Auditorium next Thursday night when Paul Whiteman, who appeals to everybody, pays his first visit to Atlanta.

Chattanooga's Grand Opera Season.

Chattanooga's second grand opera season has been scheduled for February 23 and 24. Its repertoire includes Mary Garden, Feodor Chaliapin and Rosa Raisa. Each of these stars is to appear in a role which is especially adapted to his or her voice: Garden in "Thais," Chaliapin in "Boris Godunoff" and Raisa in "Tannhauser."

This undertaking, which was underwritten by a group of Chattanooga music lovers, is in no sense a money-making enterprise. It has been sponsored purely for its cultural and amusement values and that southerners may have the opportunity to hear the Chicago Civic opera singers without leaving the south.

Mr. Gunster To Appear Tuesday.

The concert to be given by Fredrick Gunster, famous American tenor, at Edgemoor hall, West Peachtree and North avenue, at 8:15 o'clock, Tuesday evening, January 13, promises to be one of the most delightful occasions of the winter.

Mr. Gunster is an artist to whom it is a pleasure to listen. He possesses that rare trinity of virtues—taste, intelligence and temperament; in short he is an unusual artist and fairly sings his way into the hearts of his hearers.

A large audience will greet Mr. Gunster Tuesday evening. Tickets may be secured from Phillips & Crew Piano company, 181 Peachtree street, or at the door.

This concert will be given under the auspices of the Grady Hospital auxiliary.

Biltmore Tea-Dance Honors Visitors.

Informal social activities of the week at the Atlanta Biltmore were concluded with the attractive tea-dance given Saturday in the Pompeian grillroom. A two-hour dance concert was furnished by Warner's Seven Aces.

Tea tables were decorated with roses, carnations, narcissi and other flowers of the season.

Miss Belva Mather was hostess at a large party for Miss Josephine King, of Baltimore, who is the guest of Miss Maria Brown. The guests were Miss King, Miss Valeria Manley, Ruth Osburn, Miss Valeria Manley, John Osburn, Jr., John Hopkins, Howard Chandler, Baxter Maddox, William White, Vernon Wooten and Kendrick Smith.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Hawes, of Bainbridge, who are visiting Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Black at their home on Peachtree road, were honor guests, with Mr. and Mrs. Black as hosts.

Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Southwell, Mrs. Stacy Hill and Coloud Merriam were together.

Others present were Misses Adelaide Howell, Jane Sharp, Ida Nevins, Wester Hamilton, Jack Sharp, Henry Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. F. E. DeGolian, Mrs. Adelaide Howell Bower, Mrs.

A. Wells, Mr. Strant, Miss J. Daniel, Miss Mary F. Barnhardt, H. W. Rudolph, J. E. Graham, Wendell Wesley, Harry Mabley, Joe Holliday, A. D. Sessions, Ed Pope, Miss Matheson, C. E. Shepard, E. L. Bishop.

Visitors Honored At Driving Club.

An event of social interest Saturday evening was the dinner-dance at the Piedmont Driving club assembling popular debutantes, lovely visitors and club members.

Miss Mary Ballenger entertained a large party in compliment to Miss Josephine King, of Baltimore, who is the guest of Miss Maria Brown.

Others entertaining were Mr. and Mrs. L. Z. Rosser, Jr., and Dr. and Mrs. Dan Elkin.

S. P. E. Fraternity To Give Dance.

The members of the S. P. E. fraternity of Georgia Tech will entertain at an informal dance at their chapter house Saturday evening, February 7, the guests to assemble the members of the college set.

"Follies" Girls Soon To Start On Rehearsals

Atlanta society is on the tip-toe of expectancy, awaiting the arrival of Ned Weyburn, on Friday, January 16, when the rehearsals of the "Junior League Follies" will begin. A thrill of pleasurable anticipation accompanies all those who will take part in the rehearsals for the "Follies," because heretofore, the informality, and congeniality of the rehearsals have proved occasions fraught with fun and "good times."

Each girl has promised to give her time ungrudgingly, and to thus insure the absolute success of this magnificent production which will have its premiere on Monday evening, February 16, at the Atlanta theater.

Rivaling this all-important occasion, and perhaps of more immediate interest, on account of its very nearness, will be the appearance of Paul Whiteman and his wonderful orchestra, who will play to a charmed audience on Thursday evening at the auditorium. The popularity and fame of Paul Whiteman and his orchestra is widespread and those who have already been fortunate enough to have heard him have been looked on with envy by those who had been denied that wonderful pleasure. It is a foregone conclusion, therefore, that on Thursday evening Atlanta's most exclusive society, young and old, will turn out full force to fill the auditorium on this momentous occasion.

More than holding their own in the social affairs of the week, the debutantes will be the center of many lovely parties. Tuesday will find several of their number being honored at teas and luncheons. Miss Lucy Elizabeth Harper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Harper, will be complimented at a luncheon by Mrs. Godfrey McDonald. Miss Margaret McGowan, of Augusta, erstwhile and popular visitor to Atlanta, will be honored at the tea-dance at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel on Tuesday afternoon by Edward Merritt. At this time, also, Miss Rebecca Ashcraft, one of the most attractive debutantes of this season, will be honored at a party to be given by Mrs. W. D. Ellis. Of particular interest to those both socially and culturally inclined, will be the appearance of Frederick Gunster, American concert tenor, at Edgemoor hall, who comes to Atlanta under the auspices of the Woman's auxiliary of Grady hospital.

Miss Lillian McClelland, whose marriage will be an interesting event of February 7, will be the recipient of many social courtesies in advance of her wedding. On Wednesday she will be honored by Miss Dorothy Morrison at a bridge-tee. On this date, also, the marriage of Miss Elizabeth Macy, daughter of Mrs. Martha Savage Macy, to Charles Douglas Diggs, of Cumberland, Va., will take place at 6 o'clock in the afternoon at the home of the bride's mother, on Oglethorpe avenue.

Gathering one of the largest crowds of the week, and of unusual interest to the younger social set will be the dance at the East Lake Country club on Friday evening, to be given by Dr. and Mrs. Marion Benson in honor of the Druid club of Emory.

On Saturday of this week, Mrs. J. N. Harper will give a large party at the tea-dance at the Atlanta Biltmore in honor of her daughter, Miss Lucy Elizabeth Harper, and Miss Mary Ann Lipscomb, another of the debutantes of the season.

Pi Pi Sorority To Give Valentine Dance.

The Pi Pi sorority of Washington seminary will entertain at a Valentine dance Friday evening, February 13, at the Brookhaven club.

This will be one of the most brilliant occasions of the mid-winter season and will assemble several hundred members of the younger social contingent.

Officers of the sorority, who will act as official hosts, are: Miss Sophie Street, president; Miss Marion Wolff, vice president; Miss Elizabeth Johnson, secretary, and Miss Laura Chandler, treasurer.

Delightful Affairs Planned at Biltmore.

The first event of the week to attract society to the Biltmore will be the regular Sunday evening dinner-concert directed by Enrico Leide. Following is the program to be rendered by Leide's augmented concert orchestra: Overture, "Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; suite from "L'Arlésienne," Bizet; selection from "Climbo," Ponchielli; Scenes Pittoresques, Massenet; two preludes from "Lohengrin," Wagner; "The Lost Chord," Sullivan; selections from "Madame Butterfly," Puccini; ballet from "Faust," Gounod; two Hungarian dances, Brahms; march, Souan.

Tea-dances on Tuesday and Saturday evenings at the Pompeian grillroom on Wednesday evening sponsored by the Debutantes' club, will comprise the social program for the dancing contingent. Music will be furnished by Warner's Seven Aces.

At the Tuesday tea-dance Edward Merritt will entertain in honor of Miss Margaret McGowan, of Augusta. Covers will be placed for Miss McGowan, Miss Alice Harris, Miss Harriett Shelden, Miss Louise Nelson, Miss Irene Thomas, Miss Callie Orme, Miss Lucy Eliza Harper, Miss Rebecca Ashcraft, Miss Corday Rice, Miss Teleside Pratt, Miss Margaret Scruggs, Miss Anne Spalding, Edward Merritt, Will Spalding, S. B. Stricker, J. Farnsworth, Frank Wilson, Clarence Bloodworth, Scroop Enloe, Marthanne Sanders, Herbert Hutton, Everett Thomas, Milton Smith, Dr. and Mrs. Jack Caldwell, Bryan Merritt, Richard Fair, Clarence Rose and Buck Flowers.

Wednesday evening the weekly dinner-dance in the Pompeian grillroom will assemble many members of the Debutantes' club, the college set and the married circle of society. Dancing will begin at 8:30 o'clock and continue until midnight.

The largest group assembled at the Saturday tea-dance will be the party given by Mrs. J. N. Harper in compliment to her daughter, Miss Lucy Elizabeth Harper, and Miss Mary Ann Lipscomb, two attractive debutantes of the season. Her guests included Mrs. W. D. Ellis, Mrs. W. L. Rosser, Jr., and Mrs. Frank C. Owens, Mrs. Rutherford Lipscomb, and the following:

Much Being Accomplished By 4th District Societies

Gordon Street W. M. S. has passed a successful three months in the new associational year's work. The women are giving generous aid to the building fund of the new church now in progress of erection. All calls of W. M. U. work have been responded to, and all reports point to another good year's work.

Woodward Avenue.

Woodward Avenue is another very active in the fourth district. Speaking of this society, the president, Mrs. W. L. Callaway, says: "We must keep step; we must help foster all work under our care. We cannot go back. We must press forward."

Third Baptist.

A very interesting meeting of the new year was held at Third Baptist church Monday, January 5. Miss Ida Rhoad, field worker for Georgia W. M. U., was present and outlined the needs as presented by the board concerning foreign fields. She urged the women to be loyal to all the denominational benevolences. Another interesting feature was that the women had paid their pledge to the Kate Pendleton Dawson and the Andrew and Frances Stewart good-will centers, and also their appointment to all W. M. U. specials and their associational expense. They have perfected their plans for the new 1925 program for missions.

A day has been set apart for an all-day meeting observing the day of prayer for foreign missions, a program to be presented in the morning and an afternoon session given to a mission study class, one of the new books on China to be taught by Mrs.

J. W. Smith, district secretary. This society is one of the most active in the fourth district and it is always a pleasure for the secretary to be present at their meetings.

Jackson Hill Women.

News comes from Jackson Hill church that a new building will be erected in the very near future and faithful to their task the women are looking forward to a continuance of their efforts in the completion of a new house of worship.

South Side.

News comes from South Side W. M. S. that one mission study class has come to a successful close. The next study class will take as its text-book "The Wandering Jew in Brazil," and the class is announced for the third Monday in January.

Capitol Avenue.

Mrs. L. B. Smith, the capable new president of Capitol Avenue, has accomplished wonderful things the past three months.

Moreland Avenue.

Moreland Avenue, one of the nearly new churches in the fourth district, will entertain the fourth district rally this year, the date to be given later.

New Antioch.

New Antioch, the suburban church in the fourth district, sent in a splendid mission study report. The pastor, Mr. Tribble, and his splendid wife, are leading this band of women in new and pleasant paths.

Cascade W. M. S.

Mrs. J. H. Culbertson, the new president of Cascade society, finds her hands very full these days planning and organizing the work in this church.

Fellowship Banquet Was Big Occasion At First Christian

Monday evening, December 1, will be an occasion long remembered by all those present at the "Fellowship Banquet" of the First Christian (Disciples) church school. The ladies of the church prepared a magnificent turkey supper which was served with a deftness and dispatch marvelous to behold, when one considers that 250 persons sat down to the table. The young women of the various classes acted in the capacity as waitresses and under the supervision of Mrs. W. C. Stanley, Mrs. R. A. Burnett and Mrs. O. P. Black, everything moved off as smoothly as the proverbial clock work. E. R. Craighead, popular Atlanta attorney, superintendent, is a past master in presiding at a meeting and speedily made everyone feel most cordially welcome. With his bright wit and happy manner he has endeared himself to the hearts of countless hundreds in our city and elsewhere. The reports from the various departments and classes of the church, church school were both inspirational and instructive. In nearly every instance large sums of money had been raised by them through the year for the various offerings of the church, and nearly every class is clothing and educating an orphan, or helping put some boy or girl through school somewhere in the state, or attending the annual conference where they are giving some special bit of constructive work for the Master's Kingdom. Beside this during the year many of the classes have a special month when they give out flowers and pot plants for the decoration of the morning services of the church which are afterward distributed to the sick and shut-ins.

There were large delegations present from Rome, Macon, Griffin, College Park, East Point, Capitol View, Howell Station, West End Christian church, Decatur, Central Christian and many other churches. The growth and outlook indicated in their reports were an inspiration to all who heard them, as well as most instructive. Timely and interesting talks were given by the ministers and laymen in a gracious and beautiful speech of welcome, L. O. Bricker and by O. K. Cull, minister of the First Christian church, Griffin; John H. Wood, minister, Rome; Judge Patterson, Griffin; Judge Hathcock, of Atlanta, and other ministers and men of note and distinction. The chief address of the evening was by J. A. Taylor, state evangelist, of Griffin, who stated that he had been called to the state of Georgia as a minister and men of note and distinction. The chief address of the evening was by J. A. Taylor, state evangelist, of Griffin, who stated that he had been called to the state of Georgia as a minister and men of note and distinction.

It was in November, as hundreds of faithful Methodist ministers were preparing to leave their charges to take the annual conference, that they were to give an account of their stewardship, that one of their number became the central figure in one of the darkest crimes that the state of Georgia has ever had written on her pages of history. Rev. Robert Stewart, known as the "trading parson" because of his tireless and fearless fight on liquor, also was ready to come to the conference and make his report of the service he had rendered during the year, when a gang of men, who were his enemies, came to his home and made an effort to rid their community of him in order that they might continue, undisturbed, in their business of breaking the laws and the homes of our nation. His cries for help brought his wife in haste from her bed, without thought of her own life, to save that of her husband. She was murdered in the most cold-blooded way.

The message came to the conference and in the audience sat Mrs. A. F. Nunn, a fellow-pastor's wife who immediately conceived and proposed a memorial for Mrs. Stewart to be taken to the annual conference, which any minister's wife needing medical attention may come to Wesley Memorial hospital and be treated. What worthier memorial could there be than that her sisters might live because she had given her life freely? "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friend." Anyone wishing to contribute to this fund may communicate with Mrs. A. F. Nunn, Temple, Ga.

Mrs. Nunn Leads Movement For Memorial to Mrs. Stewart

Mrs. A. F. Nunn, Temple, Ga., wife of Rev. A. F. Nunn, of Temple, Ga., was the first to conceive of a memorial to Mrs. Robert Stewart, who lost her life in defense of her husband when an attempt was made by bootleggers to kidnap him at his own door.

It was in November, as hundreds of faithful Methodist ministers were preparing to leave their charges to take the annual conference, that they were to give an account of their stewardship, that one of their number became the central figure in one of the darkest crimes that the state of Georgia has ever had written on her pages of history. Mrs. J. S. McLemore
Removes to Florida.

The last meeting of the Grant Park W. M. S. for the year 1924 was held Monday afternoon, December 29, at the church.

It was also the last meeting which the pastor's wife would attend before leaving this field for new work in Florida, so the meeting was a farewell well-sung meeting for Mrs. J. S. McLemore.

A splendid program of readings and special music was rendered, the special music being a tribute of appreciation to Mrs. McLemore, which was read by Mrs. J. W. Hardy.

A number of love messages were brought to the meeting. These were given Mrs. McLemore to be read later.

The superintendent of B. W. M. U. Atlanta association was present and added her words of prayer and appreciation to Mrs. McLemore, who will be missed not alone in Grant Park church, but she leaves a vacancy in the ranks of the W. M. U. of the Atlanta association.

Mrs. McLemore was elected stewardship chairman, taking up this work three months ago.

May success in large measure attend the efforts of Rev. and Mrs. McLemore in their new field of labor. Delicious refreshments were served following the program.

Mrs. J. S. McLemore, W. KING, Superintendent W. M. U., Atlanta association.

Woman's Day
At First Christian.

The First Christian church (Disciples) of Atlanta was indeed fortunate in the observance of its women's day, to be able to take advantage of the presence in Atlanta of the president of the United Christian Missionary society of St. Louis, Dr. Frederick W. Burnham.

Dr. Burnham was in Atlanta as one of the leaders in the quadrennial council of Federal Churches of Christ in America convening here. It was not a difficult task for him to link up the humble, though triumphant, work of our faithful women with the great world interests of the council. His address was a graphic resume of the triumphs of the gospel down the centuries, because of the loyalty of its adherents to its dynamic "go." The arrest of its progress in the "Dark Ages" came about because men forgot the "Go" and set down to debate and discuss theories and hair-splitting niceties of doctrine. The renaissance of the church began again to burn, and the greatest power at work in the world today is the lever of the gospel as it makes its way throughout the nations.

Of course, the relation of our own United Christian Missionary society to the great world task, and the relation of our local work to that of the United Christian Missionary society was presented in a way to thrill and hearten us. The work of our society was given an impetus which must be felt not only in the realization of its aims for this year but its hopes for years to come.

MRS. E. B. QUICK,
First Christian church, Atlanta.

At a recent call meeting of the executive committee of the W. M. S. of the Georgia conference, Mrs. John G. Logan, of Gainesville, was elected secretary of the Gainesville district, succeeding Mrs. W. T. Hamby, who resigned because of ill health.

Hold Annual Session.

Atlanta was glad to welcome to the city on Friday, January 9, a number of out-of-town officers of the executive board of the Baptist W. M. U. of Georgia, chairmen of departments and young people's counselors, who met in annual session with Atlanta representatives of the board at Henry Grady hotel. This was a business meeting in which plans for the year program were fully discussed, and the meeting lasted the entire day.

Mrs. Taul B. White, of Rome, mission study chairman for B. W. M. U. of Georgia, who was in attendance at the annual board meeting, remained in the city at the request of Mrs. James D. Rhodes, mission study chairman for Atlanta W. M. U., and held an important meeting with the district secretaries and their mission study leaders on Saturday, January 10. Mrs. White is well known throughout the state as a successful B. W. M. U. chairman.

Mrs. James D. Rhodes was a welcome guest of the W. M. S. of the Ponce de Leon Avenue Baptist church on the morning of January 6, when a meeting was held for the purpose of studying of "In Royal Service." Mrs. Rhodes made a timely and inspirational talk to the members of the class.

Mrs. James L. Key, president of the Woman's auxiliary of the Georgia Baptist hospital, was delighted with the action of the auxiliary at the December meeting, when they voted to make Mrs. J. S. McLemore, who has served so acceptably as one of the vice presidents, honorary vice president for life. Mrs. McLemore will be missed by her many friends in Atlanta when she leaves at an early date to make her home in Sarasota, Fla., where her husband has accepted the call to the First Baptist church.

Mrs. J. L. Moran, press chairman for the Capitol Avenue Baptist church, is making an interesting report of the meeting of their fifth Monday social, noting the fact that those who enjoyed the program expressed themselves as wishing there were more fifth Mondays in every year.

Dandruffy Heads
Become Hairless

If you want plenty of thick, beautiful, glossy, silky hair, do by will means get rid of dandruff, for it will starve your hair and ruin it if you don't.

It doesn't do much good to try to brush it off. The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning, most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and two or three more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it.

You will find, too, that all itching and digging of the scalp will stop, and your hair will look and feel a hundred times better. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. Four ounces is all you will need, no matter how much dandruff you have. This simple remedy never fails.—(adv.)

With Gordon Street B. W. M. S.

The work and activities of the new church year of the W. M. S. of the Gordon street Baptist church are moving right along in keeping with the usual demands under the newly elected president, Mrs. F. B. Baldwin, who is proving very efficient and earnest in her office as leader. Mrs. W. A. Rhodes is secretary and Mrs. C. T. Knight, treasurer. Mrs. T. E. Bridges is chairman of publicity for the society.

For the 1925 church program for benevolence and missions Mrs. Baldwin has rallied her forces most efficiently and with pleasing results to the church and the pastor. The society is also shouldering her portion of the additional causes for home missions and other benevolences.

Funds Being Raised.

The work of raising adequate funds for the church's large building project now in progress is being carried on with tireless efforts and corresponding success. The sum of $127.50 was recently realized from a Christmas bazaar held on Gordon street by the society. Pledges amounts come in regularly each month from the members and various other sums realized.

The Y. W. A's, G. A's, and the Sunbeam Y. W. A's are studying each month under their respective leaders who are devoting much time and energy to this cause. Mrs. Y. B. Moore is leader for the Y. W. A., Mrs. Howell Conway for the G. A., and Mrs. L. K. Barber for the Sunbeams.

Business Woman's League.

A Business Woman's League has been formed in the society with Mrs. J. W. Dalhouse as organizer, and the meetings are held on Sunday afternoon. Miss Jessie Terry is president. Mrs. R. N. Brooks, vice president.

Mission Study.

Mrs. W. C. Munday, who until recently has been connected with the W. M. S. of the Buckhead church, is a new addition to our society, and has been made chairman of all mission study work in the society. In January, beginning the first Monday afternoon, a mission study class will begin with the Rev. W. H. Faust teaching the text book, "All the World in all the Word," by Carver. We are expecting the women as a whole to take this course and a goodly number of certificates awarded. Other books will be taken up at later periods.

All-Day Prayer.

All-day prayer services and a program will be had for world-wide missions the second week in January. The day to be announced later. Mrs. E. H. Gibson is chairman of the program committee. Lunch will be served at the noon hour.

On Monday afternoon, December 15, the society held its business session, at which time Mrs. J. W. Smith, fourth district secretary, was present with us and brought an urgent message concerning the state and associational work.

We feel the Lord is with us, supporting us and helping us to accomplish our things for His kingdom work on earth.

Gain Beauty

And keep it as I did.
By Edna Wallace Hopper

As a girl, I multiplied my beauty until it brought me world-wide fame. After 40 years in a stage career, I have kept that beauty. To the thousands who see me daily I look like a girl of 19.

That is due to cultivation and to scientific care. Not to ordinary beauty helps. I have spent years and fortunes to secure the utmost science offers.

Now I have had those help combined so a dozen as applied at once. And I am placing them at every woman's call.

One is a super-cream. It is supplied by all druggists and toilet counters as Edna Wallace Hopper's Youth Cream.

It is far more than a cream. It contains products of both lemon and strawberry. Also all the best that modern experts know to foster, soften, feed and protect the skin. All in one application. I cannot believe that there exists another beauty help to compare.

My Youth Cream comes in two types—cold cream and vanishing. They contain the same important ingredients. I use the cold cream as a night cream, the vanishing in the day. Never is my face one hour without it. The result is a complexion for 40 years admired.

I wish I knew how to induce all girls and women to adopt this super-cream. It means so much to them. I will gladly send you some to try if you will mail this coupon. Please do that if you wish to know how much a cream can do.

There are also Tricks to the Housewife's Trade and here is one worth knowing

THOUSANDS of housewives now know how to select the very juiciest and most delicious oranges and grapefruit—and the most economical, too. Here is how it's done!

Completely disregard both color and shape. Be sure they are heavy for their size. For weight means juice!

Moreover, "rusty" or unshapely oranges and grapefruit are very often much sweeter and juicier than those which merely please your eye. In fact, all these shades and shapes frequently come from the same orange or grapefruit tree.

Such knowledge as this has led increasing thousands of housewives to demand Sealdsweet Oranges and Grapefruit every time. They have learned that, compared size for size with ordinary oranges and grapefruit, they cost less, because

Mrs. Toepel, chairman of membership, stated that on Wednesday, January 14, the mothers and teachers of all the seventh grades would be introduced at a class day, and particularly urged all mothers who have children in any of the seventh grades to attend. Mrs. George W. Price, efficient chairman of Better Films for the Atlanta P-T. A. council.

Mrs. George W. Price, chairman of better films for the Atlanta P-T. A. council, submits the following article on the work of the committee on the division of P-T. A. representatives was organized by Mrs. Frank McCormack, under whose guidance it reached its present splendid standing.

"Each P-T. A. in the city and county is asked to appoint a 'better films' chairman who in turn is asked to select a committee of five. These representatives meet once a month to formulate plans and make reports. These committees assist Mrs. C. N. Woods, chairman of review of local picture houses and Mrs. Wing, chairman of review for children's matinees. By appointment, they are also present at matinees to assist Mrs. W. L. Colley, chairman of chapters.

"Most of our schools are buying moving picture machines and pictures are being shown weekly in many of the schools. In this way the matinees are soon paid for.

"Last, but not least, is the better films luncheon on the fourth Thursday of each month. Here we meet with the Atlanta better films committee of which Mrs. Almona Richardson is president. This body consists of a representative from nearly every large city, cultural, educational, and friends of the city.

"Our speakers are often noted and distinguished people. Occasionally we have the thrill of meeting face to face with a movie star. Those we have met were conscientious, hard-working artists, working to make good pictures, profitable and entertaining to the public. They are better than Mrs. Richardson, herself, after a trip to Hollywood, Washington, or New York. From the office of the register we have received the moving picture producers and distributors of America in New York who learn that Atlanta has the cleanest picture houses of any city of its size in the country.

"Col. Jason Joy, executive secretary of the Hays organization, on a recent visit here, said: 'I had no idea that Atlanta had progressed so far. The work of Mrs. Newton Wing and her committee is a tremendous achievement in itself. The Atlanta committee is far ahead of the rest of the country in regard to the selection of the proper kind of pictures for children.'

"In addition to our regular work each year at Christmas we collect and send gifts of all kinds to our needy school children.

"A large box was placed in front of the Howard theater and our children were encouraged to bring toys and books and take their part in making Christmas brighter for those less fortunate than themselves.

"Through the kindness of Mr. John Lloyd, we used 225 Peachtree street as headquarters and there received from generous Atlantans garments, toys and other articles. School chairmen distributed to more than a thousand homes.

"On December 26 the Howard management co-operated with the regular meeting of the better films circle to about 2,000 of Atlanta's needy children."

"The very name, better films committee, indicates the purposes for which we strive. Our slogan is, 'Cooperate and educate.' The movie is the most attractive thing in the world to boys and girls. It fascinates youth and thereby doubles its meaning to us.

"Train up a child in the way he should go, is a true and tried saying. The moving picture producer can present in one picture material that it would take one individual year to cover and which is not accessible to the average person in any form.

"Every Saturday morning at the Howard theater, there are three selected pictures: a comedy to create joy and mirth; an educational film to gain knowledge and a theatrical film to entertain. Many of these last are selected from stories that teach good traits and noble character.

"To much cannot be said of the untiring efforts and the wonderful success of Mrs. Porter Langston, as executive secretary of the better films circle, for the last two years. She was known as the "Saturday mother" which loving title has been passed on to her. Her work is a masterpiece of efficiency and enthusiasm.

"Preceding the pictures, artistic programs are staged, each week by Miss Nell Emery, chairman, of that phase of the work.

"The average attendance at these matinees is over a thousand, showing how many mothers appreciate the fact that children should see only selected pictures.

"Ours has been called the 'playground' of parent-teacher work. We deal with children's pleasures.

"Once a month tickets are given away to the class having the largest number of mothers present at the P-T. A. meeting.

"The attendance was good, and a keen interest was shown in the gratifying reports of the work of the different departments.

"In the department of Applied education, Miss Nell Emery, chairman, reported that the class of interior decorating, under the auspices of the Kirkwood league, had won three prizes, and that a new class would soon be formed.

"Miss Zelle Foster was appointed chairman of fine arts to fill the unexpired term of Mrs. J. L. Algood, who has recently moved to Covington, Ga.

Mrs. A. B. Hargrave, chairman of public welfare, will have charge of the program at the February meeting, when the yearly mid-winter tea will be given.

WELL ONE DAY IN BED THREE

That Was the Life of Mrs. Hollister Until She Began Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Wyandotte, Michigan.—"After my baby was born I did not do my own work for six months and could hardly take care of my own baby. I always had a pain in my right side and it was so bad I was getting round shoulders. I would feel well one day and then feel so bad for three or four days that I would be in bed. One Sunday my mother came to see how I was, and she said a friend told her to tell me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So the next day I got a bottle and here it was half taken I got relief. After I was well again I went to the doctor and he asked me how I was getting along. I told him I was taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. He said he did not hurt any one to take it. I am always recommending the Vegetable Compound to others and I always have a bottle of it on hand. Mrs. HENRY HOLLISTER, R. Report on Seventh District Made by Mrs. Oscar Peebles

Mrs. Oscar T. Peebles, president of the Seventh District Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, has sent to the club page a most comprehensive and instructive report on the activities of the clubs in the 13 counties which comprise this congressional district.

There are 13 counties in the seventh district. The largest cities are Rome, Dalton, Marietta, Cartersville and Cedartown, with Rockmart, Calhoun, LaFayette, Dallas, Tallahassee, Summerville and Chatsworth of good size, and all active, wide-awake places.

There are 23 federated clubs in the district, with approximately 1,200 members.

There are two county federations, nine club houses, 12 club libraries, and quite a number of other organizations—clubs that for one reason or another have felt that they could not unite with the state and national bodies.

Work of District.

The work of the district runs into many channels. My term of office began last May and until the end of the year I have been busy with the work of the district except in a general way. Therefore it is necessary for me to make a report for the past year, giving a summary of the reports read at the last district convention.

The work of the clubs throughout the district during the year just past has been very largely along certain lines:

First, a study of citizenship with patriotic programs, cooperation in service men, and in many ways definite work was done in studying men and measures in voting; second, cooperation in all health objects; local doctors gave aid in the visits of the healthmobile; public welfare work included visiting jails and the county homes of the poor; selling Christmas seals, etc.; third, library work, placing books in local libraries and in school libraries; fourth, building clubhouses; fifth, a greater cooperation with the school of the various grades; playgrounds have been encouraged and in some instances fitted out. Scholarships have been given to the home demonstration agent in the counties have met with the most splendid support, and upon the whole, the clubs have gone forward bravely without a single backward step.

From a financial standpoint, the outstanding features of the year's work have been: Five hundred dollars raised by the Lesche club of Dalton during the holidays by the sale of Christmas seals; $1,100 given by the Rockmart Woman's club to the Tallahassee club, of Cartersville, toward the equipment of a new high school building.

To give a brief summary of the definite work of the clubs during the past year:

The Lesche Club of Dalton—Fifty-seven members. Maintains a club library, had Christmas carols sung by the children, planted memorial trees, sponsored three county schools, gave liberally to state work and $500 raised by sale of Christmas seals. Has cared for $250 to school auditorium fund, sponsored two plays, made and sold $40 worth of poppies on Armistice day. Has raised over $1,100 during the year, has a fund started with which to build a clubhouse.

Dalton Woman's Club—One hundred and twenty-two members. Has bought for the home of the late Robert Loveman, the library to be a memorial to the gifted poet. Different chairmen brought to Dalton distinguished speakers, including the late field county boys who served in the great war. Sent boxes to Augusta hospital and $10 toward a Victory fund for hospital. Received $10 for hospital. Held a demonstration agent, $25 to assist a girl at summer school, $25 scholarships at Powder Springs, 10 to Tallahassee, 10 to dormitory at Victoria. Planted trees and held a picnic in the park. Bought piano; teas on Saturday afternoon. Have raised during the year, $1,163.

Maintains rest room or cottage; pays attendant $25 a month; library in same building, 1,900 volumes; 50 crepe myrtle trees planted as a hedge in memorial park; 200 trees on Arbor day; gave prizes for lawns and flowers; $25 domestic science scholarships at Athens; sponsored 100 county schools; gave $25 to the state. Greatest work of year: A closer touch with county women. Calhoun entertains the next district meeting in May.

Mrs. Hayes Makes Official Announcement.

The official report of the Los Angeles convention is just off the press and ready for distribution. Owing to a financial misunderstanding, the reporter who was engaged to make a verbatim report of the convention, refused to turn over to the recording secretary the report which he made and also the speeches, reports and resolutions which were given to him to be incorporated in the report. The last of September the recording secretary was authorized to publish proceedings, using the minutes which she took and which were adopted by the convention, also such reports and speeches as she might be able to assemble. On account of this condition, only a small number have been printed. Every club having direct membership in the general federation is entitled to a copy free provided the club asks for it and sends postage.

The price to others is $1.00. I am especially anxious that every club in Georgia have a copy and as it will only cost the postage of 6 cents, I will very gladly immediately write me enclosing 6 cents and a request for the book. It contains valuable information for the clubs and I believe will prove both entertaining and instructive to the interested club women.

FAITHFULLY,
LOUISE H. HAYS,
Recording Secretary, General Federation.

Augusta Woman's Club To Present Hinshaw Opera Co.

What will probably be the most notable event from both the social and artistic standpoint of the month will be the coming on January 23 of the Hinshaw Opera company in Mozart's most beautiful opera, "The Marriage of Figaro," sung in English. This is brought out under the auspices of the Augusta Woman's club and is expected to duplicate the big success they made last winter with their presentation of Kreier and Pavlowa. The company that is coming is composed of artists of note in the musical world, and who are famous both for their dramatic gifts and their magnificent voices. Mr. Hinshaw is fostering with all of his influence the movement to have all grand opera sung in English, for there is no more reason why all operas should be sung in a language unintelligible to the audience, than why plays should be presented in French or Italian to an English audience.

There was a time when one had to go abroad to hear the great artists and musicians of the world, and the cultured class that traveled grew accustomed to hearing all fine music sung in foreign tongues. But now the best artists in the world come to America, it is this country that has the money now to bring the great artists here and more and more will be heard of grand opera in America. But it is as yet a novelty and so Augusta will enjoy Mozart's operatic singing in English not only as a great musical event, but as a decided novelty. Boxes are already being engaged, and long before the evening of the opera, the seats will be taken. Hundreds are expected from nearby towns and in every way this will be a great occasion in Augusta—Augusta Chronicle.

The Winder Woman's club, with Mrs. A. D. McCurry, president, placed special emphasis on Arbor day celebration, not only by planting trees, but also by arranging suitable programs to be used in rural schools in Barrow county, from which came a splendid response. The children of the school planted 12 trees on the school grounds.

The women's club, working with the D. A. R., W. C. T. U., and American Legion auxiliary, are endeavoring to beautify the Bankhead highway, through their county.

On Arbor day, a splendid and appropriate program was carried out by the above mentioned organization, Mrs. H. A. Carrithers, Mrs. Henry Medley, Mrs. J. S. Hargrove, representing the Woman's club. This club added 20 trees, making a total of 477 trees planted in the Bankhead highway by this club.

Augusta Club Women Hear Dr. Julius Schaad Talk

That "Americanism is Christianity" was the message brought to the Woman's club Friday afternoon by Dr. Julius Schaad, of St. Paul's church, in his eloquent and inspiring talk on Americanism.

Dr. Schaad was introduced by Mrs. Frank Fleming, chairman of the Americanism program for the afternoon, who certainly deserves the thanks of the large number present. Friday, for giving them the pleasure and privilege of hearing so gifted a speaker with a message of such moment.

Dr. Schaad prefaced his talk by speaking of St. Paul's church as "the most sacred civic spot in all Augusta," as there was not a spot of the ground that has not been drenched in the blood of the men who were willing to give life itself in the cause of the freedom of America. He also paid a tribute to the power of woman in the world today, and to her plan of work for the next two years.

The board will be extensively entertained. On Monday night the women of Alexandria, Va., will give a banquet. The director of the District of Columbia will entertain at tea. Mrs. Coolidge will receive the board at the home of the director. The board will be entertained at headquarters. The business of the day will be chiefly to install the new directors and chairmen of departments. In addition, a report will be given of the work of the past year.

When the Mayflower arrived with its passengers they did not come to plant a democracy, but to form a theocracy with God as the head. They came to obtain religious liberty for themselves and their descendants. Following the pages of history, Dr. Schaad showed how the men who drafted the constitution were all men who were men of God. The laws they set in motion were Christian in their nature. Up to 1900 the same continued to be true and almost every president and chief justice has been a member of a Christian church. Since the world has ended this truth that a nation must be founded on religion to live has been visioned and expressed by many great writers as well as by religious leaders. He quoted an editorial of Henry Waterson in which he says that "the future of the world looks dark and gloomy."

He said: "I should be glad to see our clubwomen to visit the club 'poor houses' as we more generally call them, to teach our children the difference between a deed, a mortgage and a note to the grocer around the corner." (e) We shall endeavor to learn not only the conditions that surround the factories and industries in our district, but to know what we manufacture and why. We shall study the geography and topography of our district so that we may have an intelligent idea of what nature has given us in trees, in minerals, in agriculture, in fruits, and in our own people.

Royston Woman's Club Hears Noted Georgian Speak

The Royston Woman's club held an enthusiastic meeting Tuesday afternoon with the president, Mrs. J. A. Dyer, in the chair. After the usual routine of club business a parliamentary drill was given by Mrs. W. H. Henderson, who was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Mr. Henderson is a teacher of several years' experience and gave the club a fine lesson in parliamentary laws. The president had hoped to have a debate on the child labor amendment. Rev. J. C. Brand, who was to speak for the amendment, could not be present. However, Colonel George Adams, representative in the Georgia legislature, gave a splendid address on the amendment. Colonel Adams opposed to this and gave reasons that are hard to answer. Mrs. Walter Hodges, president of the eighth district federation, with her usual eloquence told why she was opposed to this amendment, but she spoke very feelingly of how she felt about the child who had to work in the mills, but that Georgia was being maligned about illiteracy in our state and how our children had to work in our factories and she favored and speaks fluently on what should be done to obliterate this from the minds of those who are not informed of true conditions in our grand old state. Mrs. Hodges is one of the silver-tongued orators of the state federation. One only has to attend the state convention to learn in what high esteem she is held by the federation.

Other distinguished guests to give greetings to our club and participate in the afternoon's program were Mrs. Gene Mathews, president of Hartwell Woman's club and a fluent speaker; Mrs. Skelton, president of the Bremen club of Hartwell, and Mrs. Lawrence Ivy, of Gainesville, S. C., and Miss Claire Ray, former president of LaGrange Woman's club, were prominent guests. Glad to welcome Mrs. Asa Brown as a visitor. The club members were delighted to have these prominent club women and Rev. C. W. Henderson, pastor of the Baptist church of Royston, former president of the Georgia academy; Colonel G. A. Adams, representative of Franklin county in the Georgia legislature.

On Tuesday, January 13, there will be meetings of the following committees: Executive, headquarters and house committee department chairmen. Tuesday afternoon, 2 to 4:30 o'clock, policy committee, executive committee and state presidents.

Tuesday evening, dinner in the federation tea house, followed by a social evening at headquarters.

Covington Woman's Club Holds Meeting For January

On Tuesday afternoon, January 6, the Woman's club of Covington held the first meeting of the New Year and there must have been many resolutions, as almost the entire membership was out in gala attire to meet Mr. and Mrs. Slidell, who were club members.

C. Clark, vice president, was in the chair. Roll was called and revised. Minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Mrs. Brown, of Atlanta, representing the Atlanta Georgian, gave a plan for raising funds, which was accepted by the club, work to begin at once.

The president reported the work done by the public welfare committee during 1924 and stressed the fact that the club of Covington was the only one in Georgia which had been publicly thanked by the grand jury.

At the conclusion of the business session the meeting was turned over to the program committee, who presented the following numbers: Piano solo, Jack Neal; vocal solo, Miss Ann Pauline Anderson; violin solo, Mrs. Anderson.

After the musical program, Mrs. Clark introduced the club's guest, Mrs. Slidell, whose address was filled to overflowing with wonderful and beautiful thoughts.

Mrs. C. I. Groover Will Read For Tallulah Falls School

One of the interesting events of the New Year will be the reading of "Sun Up" by Lula Vollmer, the reading to be given by Mrs. C. I. Groover at the Elk club in Columbus, O., the afternoon of January 16.

Mrs. Groover most graciously volunteered to give the reading, the proceeds to be used for the Student club contribution to the Tallulah Falls school.

Mrs. Groover is a most gifted reader and possesses a most charming personality.

Already much interest is being manifested in the reading and the demands for tickets will be large.

It is most fitting that Mrs. Groover give this reading, which depicts the life of mountain folk.

"Sun Up" was the outstanding success of a season in New York. It was also played in Boston and Chicago. Lucile LaVerne has the leading role in the district federation, in the mountains of North Carolina near the city of Asheville. Misses Verner, the author, and LaVerne, the star, are both southern women and work in the mountains with the hardy and lives of the mountain folk.

This reading will be given for the benefit of Tallulah Falls school, that "light in the mountains" in which every Georgian is deeply interested. Every cent of the proceeds will go for this worthy cause.

Fifteen years ago last summer the Tallulah Falls Industrial school began a ministry by which it has come to be known through all the neighboring countryside as the "Light in the Mountains." There were but 12 pupils to begin with, and sorely meager equipment; but there was a great and generous spirit of cooperation. Today there is an enrollment of 180 pupils—70 or 80 boarders and many day pupils. There are many who are anxious to be taken in but there is no room. The life chance of many a mountain boy and girl in Georgia depends upon the fund which the school is now endeavoring to raise. This work is for the children of the poorest of America's Anglo-Saxon stock that this service is projected in children who otherwise will grow up without the education to which their native gifts are entitled.

Mrs. Groover's reading of the story "Sun Up" will be for this noble cause. Every cent of the proceeds will go to this worthy cause.

Camp Fire Girls To Have Interesting Activities This Week

The Camp Fire Council of Girls is made up of one representative from each Camp Fire group in Atlanta. They meet once a month at Camp Fire headquarters, 415 Chamber of Commerce building, for a luncheon. At this time each member reports what has been done in her group during the past month and gives the outline for the coming month. In this way each girl carries back splendid suggestions to her group. These girls plan the city-wide activities and by helping to carry out the plans learn what cooperation means. This council of girls was organized last June when the Camp Fire Girls were at Camp Highlands by Miss Mary Louise Wilson, who was executive secretary at the time. It is proving a most important spoke of the Camp Fire wheel. The council of girls has arranged the program for the indoor picnic to be held in hall No. 1 of the Chamber of Commerce building on Saturday, January 17.

The picnic will carry out the camp idea. Each group will have a puppet tent with the Indian name of the group on it. The two Camp Fire groups at Hoke Smith Junior High will have charge of the decorations. The Camp Fire health trail will be started on this day. Copies of the list of health habits will be given to each girl and the group that makes the best record during the five months of the health trail will be given a week at the Camp Fire camp.

Georgia Tech Woman's Club Features Italian Meeting

The last meeting of the Georgia Tech Woman's club was held at the home of Mrs. J. H. Gailey, 53 West Twelfth street. Mrs. Gailey received her guests wearing an exquisite imported gown of hand-made fillet and hemstitched white voile over yellow silk. She was assisted by Mrs. Bush-brown, Mrs. Shaffer and Mrs. Stovall.

The most important feature of this meeting was a very interesting talk by Mrs. Gailey about her experiences in Europe during the past year. She confined her remarks largely to Italy as she had spent eight months of her time in that country.

Her instructive points regarding the fountains, viaducts and cloisters were illustrated by many splentest of the Indian group names. During the afternoon each group will give a stunt not over six minutes long. A prize will be awarded for the best.

The indoor picnic will be from 10:30 a. m. until 4 p. m. and it is the first of many jolly times in store for Atlanta Camp Fire Girls during the year 1925.

The Camp Fire Guardians association will entertain Miss Louise Hollands, the new executive secretary, with a tea Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock at Camp Fire headquarters. Mrs. Tom Brooke and Miss Helen Bagley, assistant secretary, will assist Mrs. Fred Hodgson, chairman of the association, in introducing Miss Hollands. Mrs. George Wright will pour tea.

Miscellaneous Shower Honors Mrs. Lowenthal.

Mrs. O. O. Lynch and Mrs. W. F. Reeves were joint hostesses at a miscellaneous shower Saturday afternoon, as a charming compliment to Mrs. M. M. Lowenthal. Twenty-five guests were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Lowenthal will go to Macon after the 15th to make their future home.

THE PEARL OF AMARU

Blue Ribbon Fiction by J. ALLAN DUNN

A Thrilling Tale of the South Seas—Romance and Savagery the Background for a Vision of a White Girl.

THE Halcyon slid through the reefgate on the top of the flood. The cable rattled out and the schooner swung slowly seaward, rising to the broken rollers that slid gently hissing to the beach, their diminishing swells, shot with seafire, reflecting the stars, losing themselves in the purple darkness. The breeze blew off the land, bringing with it the fragrant blend of odorous fern and vine and blossom, the rustle of unseen verdure.

Sprague felt that here, at last, was the island of his dreams. It towered nebulous, mysterious, a loom of purple against a violet sky that was soft as velvet, the pinnacled crags vaguely outlined as they blotted out the "silver river" of the Milky Way.

Gill went below, leaving his passenger in the bows. The native crew padded about the deck, more like shadows than men, except for their low chanting as they coiled and furred and gasketed. Sprague turned, looking seaward, where the waves, white hooded, rose to steal across the ramparts of the reef, like ghostly riders on black steeds, inevitably discovered, hurled back with their charge shattered in a booming salvo of sound and smoky surf. Over the horizon the sky was shaking in the east like a curtain about to rise, its dolphin colors shading swiftly from amethyst to lavender, to gray, to saffron, then to the pink flush of actual dawn as he turned again to watch the island unveiled.

The purple loom of land, seeming to float upon the sea, ethereal, began to palpitate, to take on color. Faint gleams of green showed, pulsing, illusive, like the play of color in the heart of an opal. The mists came writhing out between the fantastic minarets and pinnacles, catching hints of sunglow as the crags grew sharper, weirder against the lightening sky and paling stars.

"Wait till you see Amaru," Gill had told him all the way from the sun-baked Paumotu with their tepid, murky atoll lagoons that had left him disappointed, the lure of the South seas dulled. "A regular jewel, I'm tellin' you. I'm goin' there to git a jewel myself," he added.

"A pearl?" Sprague asked him. Gill flung back his red bearded face and laughed, the reek of gin puffed out with the guffaw.

"Aye, a pearl! Virgin, white, perfect! Wait till you see it, my son. Belongs to me—though the present owner don't know it."

He laughed again. Amaru would have to be worth while to offset the company of Gill, Sprague thought, regretting the impulse that had made him take passage in the smelly schooner that was stale with ancient cargoes of shell and copra and dried sea slugs.

Gill was a steady drinker rather than a drunkard. But he was a coarse and dirty bully, roaring at his kanakas when he came on deck, below sprawling unshaven and tipping gin in his untidy stateroom or snoring in his bunk, stripped to the lowers of rumpled, grimy pajamas, his hairy chest rising to his grunts.

Once Sprague had refused to join in the maudlin orgies of the Paumotu beaches, to match drink with drink, to sit up half the night gambling with dice or cards Gill ceased to regard him as anything but a young fool who had paid through the nose for the privilege of passage on the trading trip of the Manuwai and the sharing of the messes concocted by the Chino-Melanesian cook.

But here was Amaru, the island of the perfect, virgin pearl, making good the boast of the skipper, casting off the dusky gauze of night to greet the kisses of the bridegroom, the ardent sun.

Overhead high clouds glowed orange and rose. Suddenly, abruptly, it was day! Vital, barbaric, exuberant, infinitely beautiful. Amaru flamed and flashed with hues that seemed purely prismatic until the dazzled eyes, adjusted, noted the exquisite mosaic of the setting, the pastel shades and undertones.

There were cannibals in the dark bush, ape-like men who prowled along the narrow jungle trails or danced worm naked about blazing fires while their pendulous breasted women shuffled silently in the shadows to the rhythm of the great image drums. Traders held their barter stations and plantations on the beaches only by virtue of the mana of the white man—the power handed down by ghostly ancestors and friendly gods, a situation friable as the crust of a lava flow, liable at any moment to be broken through by a rush of unreasoning ferocity.

Yet this could not destroy the beauty of Amaru, rising from the sea. Sprague's cigarette went out, half smoked, as he stood in the bows, gazing at the revelation of his isle of dreams.

Across the clear emerald of the lagoon was a curving strip of sand, vined with blooming creepers; on either hand coco palms groved in stately rows of silver trunks, lifting to waving fronds. Beyond them glossy mangroves stilted to the water, low cliffs set with screw pines, a waterfall spraying down.

At the back successive terraces, shrubbed with ylang-ylang, plumaria, hibiscus, sweetheart vines and bougainvillea in riotous confusion of scent and color. The highest, above the low bungalow with its wide porch, were thick with orange trees, lemon, citron, breadfruit and mangoes, heavy with Aladdin fruit. A high coral wall, with a heavy gate in its center, masked all but the thatch of the labor quarters. There were smaller buildings—one a store—a copra shed with roof of corrugated iron. A long wharf, a small launch riding beside it with blistered paint and a red and white awning.

THIS was Lyon's landing, last and most important port of call before the Halcyon started on its return trip to Tahiti.

Fa clattered pans in his galley. Sprague tossed his half burned cigarette in the water as Gill came forward, staring at the skipper with astonished eyes. Gill, sober and pre-eminently clean! His beard was combed, his great body—too heavy at the belt—was clad in spotless white duck. There was a scarlet cummerbund about his middle; a white shirt, open at the throat, displayed a loosely tied bow of blue dotted with white. He wore canvas shoes that had been freshly pipe-clayed and a wide rimmed hat of bleached lahala weave, wound with a pugaree of blue and white stripes. He grinned at Sprague, but his green gray eyes held no smile. Staring out of his brown face, they looked like orbs of painted glass that challenged flippancy.

"I'm goin' ashore after breakfast, mister," he announced. "Chow'll be ready in fifteen minnits, boat in thirty. So, if you want to come along . . ." He accompanied the pause with a look that was doubtful, warning, menacing, not entirely explained to Sprague when he continued. "This place is mine, or it will be when I leave. My property, lock, stock an' barrel. Especially the stock, live an' otherwise. You don't want to fergit that, Sprague."

The skipper turned on his heel. The curious emphasis of his voice was like the sudden pressure of cold steel against the temple. Sprague knew that while Gill felt he could not forbid him a landing he would have liked to do so. That there was something ashore that the captain considered strictly his own business. Sprague was not intrigued. He wanted only to roam along the beach. If Lyons of Lyons' landing was like the rest of the traders he had met in Gill's company he had no desire to make his acquaintance. He said so—politely. The skipper stopped.

"Better stick 'round the plantation, mister," he said, grimly. "It ain't healthy in the bush. The natives put up signs, some places. They all mean the same thing, 'Trespassers, beware!' Pays a man to attend strictly to his own affairs in these parts."

That was double warning, and it pricked Sprague a little; piqued a curiosity that otherwise would practically have not existed. It made him study Gill, in his metamorphosis of clean linen, more closely at breakfast. The man's big chest tested the seams of the white jacket. There was a drag about the left armpit that puzzled Sprague a little until he identified it as the telltale of a snugly fitting holster and pistol, the latter undoubtedly an automatic. When he got up from the table he glanced at the arms' rack and confirmed his judgment. It was the first time he had known Gill to carry a gun, though the Halcyon's armament was designed for protection against a possible sally of turbulent tribesmen. Sprague had a blue barreled Colt of his own that went with a regulation service belt and holster. Aside from the question of comfort, he disliked to pack it except upon real or expected occasion, and there seemed no reason why he should need it at Lyons' landing. Instead, he took his camera.

"Stay here long?" he asked Gill.

"Couple of days. Ought to have cargo here to fill. This is Tuesday. Probably leave Friday mornin', early. I ain't certain, though." A sort of smugness bloomed on the skipper's tanned countenance that was hard to account for. Was there some sort of enchantment for Gill, too, on Amaru?

It did not look like it as they encountered Lyons at the head of the wharf, a lean man with a protuberant belly, his head bald, his straggly beard streaked with gray and matted with tobacco juice, eyes the color of dirty dishwater between the inflamed lids, yaws festering on his dirty wrists. He was barefooted, his trousers creased and grimy, the rest of his clothing consisting of a belt and an unclean cotton singlet out of which swung long arms lacking muscle, spattered with freckles where they were not hairy. His nose, that started in a hook and ended in a bulb, was covered with broken veins. His lower lip was full and pendulous and constantly showed his stained and broken teeth.

Sprague got a whiff of his breath, compared to which that of a Gila monster would be attar of roses. It was surcharged with gin. His head nodded and his hands shook slightly but continuously as he seemed to hang deferentially on Gill's every look, word or gesture while he nervously chewed tobacco and expectorated its juice.

A Chinaman, with a glossy cue wrapped about his head, his whites as immaculate as his master's were dirty, came out on the veranda of the bungalow, towards which the three men were walking, and pounded at a triangle of steel. Almost instantly the big gate opened in the coral wall of the labor compound and a chattering mob of plum black natives emerged, loin clothed, their frizzy mops of hair variously colored from lime bleached yellow and rusty red to black. They carried hoes, and, as they marched towards a coco grove, they stopped their jabbering to roll their eyes at the white men, the whites showing plainly.

"They've got no more snap to 'em than a bunch o' bums," said Gill. "Why don't you put some pep into them, Jim? Touch 'em up with a rawhide or the tail end of a stingray. That's the sort of tonic they want, the lazy—!"

HE had not raised his voice, but the tone of it got through to the laborers. They stiffened, straightened, hurried silently on. Gill laughed.

"Show 'em who's the boss. That's the stuff. Half of 'em don't earn their bellyful. How's your tally, Jim?"

"It ain't as good as it might be. We've had a touch of dysentery," Lyons hastened to add, deprecatingly, as Gill glowered at him. "I've done my best."

Gill grunted.

"Where's Helen?" he demanded.

"She's over vistin' with the missionary's wife. She'll be back by ternight. It ain't right for a gal like her to be 'thout enny comp'ny, Gill. You wasn't in sight when she left yesterday." He winced when Gill raised his fist, but it was only to pound him with open palm on the back.

"You're right, Jim Lyons. The gal needs comp'ny. We got to see she has it—an' we will." His tone shifted. "There's somethin' wrong with yore kanakas outside of dysent'ry, Jim. None of 'em sick now, is there? That bunch acts dopey."

"Seto's been down."

"What in hell does he want?"

Lyons, with lifted eyebrows, glanced towards Sprague, but Gill was impatient, explosive. Despite his presumably genial swat on Lyons' shoulder, something had upset the skipper.

"He offered to bring me down ten men from the village. Said it was too bad the work was behind and the ten would help."

"Well?"

Lyons spat and looked again at Sprague, who was not particularly interested and tried to so appear.

"I told him I had men enough, if they'd work. He said he thought maybe he could make them work if I'd take the ten and give him what he wanted."

"Same as before?"

"Mounts to the same thing."

"What you tell him?"

"I told him he'd have to wait till you showed up."

"An' me loaf around while the work's caught up? Damn you, Lyons, what did you bring me into it for? You ought to have kicked the hide off that lousy wizard the first time he showed."

"It's all very well to talk."

"I'll handle him," Gill wheeled on Sprague. They had reached the bottom of the veranda steps. "Mister, I've got bisness to talk over with Lyons. He don't drink, so you needn't ask him in, Jim. You take yore stroll an' shoot yore pictures, but go easy if the kanakas don't seem to want to stand for it. Git back here for tiffin an' Jim'll show you his hospitality. Jim ain't long on style for himself, speshully when his daughter ain't home, but he's got a cook that could make cream waffles out of oakum. Don't stray off up any bush paths, whether they're marked or not. Tiffin's twelve, eh, Jim?"

Dismissed, something like a little boy sent to play with his toys while his elders talk of affairs beyond his scope, Sprague went good humoredly enough. A row was evidently pending between Gill and Lyons, and he fancied that the former was forcing it. The skipper appeared to be some sort of a partner at Lyons' landing.

The discrepancies between Lyons' unprepossessing appearance and the neatness of the Chinaman, the order of the terrace gardens, the tidy look of what he had glimpsed of the veranda gave Sprague a little food for thought. Perhaps Helen—evidently the daughter—had some influence over the trader.

A little of the glamour of Amaru had departed with the meeting of Lyons, the sight of the savage laborers, the shore manners of the skipper.

"A sweet place for a girl to live in," he told himself as he strolled up a path leading to the highest terrace. "No wonder she goes to visit the missionary's wife. If she sighted Gill's schooner she'd be apt to go the sooner and stay the longer." He gave the unknown Helen no further speculation. Girls did not bother him. He had been a bit fed up on them just before the war, he believed, and he hadn't cared much for them since. Heard too many things about them from his trench chums, for one thing. He had arrived at what he considered a conclusion—that love meant loss of liberty.

Sprague took a picture or two, conscious that ordinary film and filter could transfer nothing of the riot of color. He worked along the edge of the jungle, beyond the end of the planted terraces, towards the coco plantations, interested in the production of copra and its processes.

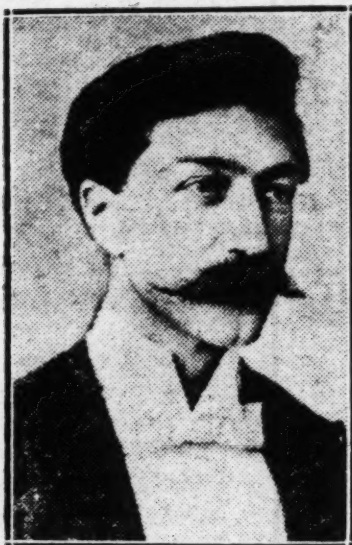

HE was still above the feathery whorls of the palms, rocketing out from the tall stems above the nut clusters. A wind from the sea tossed and ruffled them till the fronds flashed in the sun like unsheathed sword blades. He could hear men talking—jabbering, rather—and he looked for a way down to the grove. Suddenly he came upon the entrance to a bush path, a narrow corridor hacked out of the jungle, almost as a gardener trims yew. Extended elbows would brush either side of the trail, the floor of which was beaten hard as cement by the passing of myriads of naked, horny feet. It was not inviting, aside from what wisdom Sprague had gathered in South sea ways. And there was a sign that plainly said, as Gill had warned him, "Trespassers Beware." A skull suspended by a raffia string from a bamboo pole that bent slightly under its weight, looking like a fishing rod and its catch—surely not its lure. The bony thing, that bobbed and swung in the breeze, turning its hollow eye sockets towards Sprague with weird light and shade suggestions of glancing mockery, a mutilated leer in the upper jaw. The lower was missing.

A little more of the glamour of Amaru departed, some of the warmth went out of the sunshine. He began to think that Gill's idea of packing a gun was not such a bad one. But the path beckoned, for all its grisly tabu warning. It spelled adventure. Overlacing boughs made sections of it a tunnel that ran darkly back, untouched by the sun, to where it sharply angled to the left. Half way a vine sprawled carelessly across the gloomy path, twining and tendrilling. Over it two butterflies, vivid even in the shadow, hovered like windblown flowers.

His eyes dwelled on the vine and inhibitions, etched by the experience of ancient begetters on the cortex of his brain, whispered to him that it curled a little too naturally, that it might well run to a trigger that would send spear or dart streaking through his quivering body. But this unsloughable memory of the past could not halt his modern reactions. The bush dared him and he accepted the challenge, going as carefully as ever murderer crept at midnight, overstepping the vine while the gaudy butterflies flitted on ahead. A lull came in the wind with a sudden, still hush and

Even Grandma Was Bobbed

A sheik of '89.

LOS ANGELES, January 10.—A girl seats herself in a barber shop in a downtown hotel. She is nervous and excited. For the last time she runs her fingers through her long tresses, then—

"Bob it, please."

It is her first bob. After resisting for months and months she has succumbed to the prevailing fashion. Each click of the unfeeling scissors is a pang, yet eagerly she awaits the outcome. The girl, perhaps, thinks she is doing something daring; something mother or grandmother never heard of in the heyday of their youth.

Well! Some thirty-five years ago, long before the average bobbed-haired girl of modern days came to this whirling old planet, the bobbed-hair craze swept the country. Mothers, grandmothers and the flappers of those days were victims of the questionable charms of the tomboy bob.

Bob here to stay, so says L. M. Cooper, veteran barber at a downtown hotel, whose scissors and razor have been wielded over a long list of persons whose names are largely writ in history of certain middle western states and who was a pioneer hair bobber in those bygone days when bashful beaux clutched 'kerchiefs lest they spoil milady's frock; when dancers danced one yard apart and little Tommy was content to take his violin lessons and didn't tease grandmother about the saxophone.

Kingdoms may topple, says Mr. Cooper, republics fall, the Klan unmask and European nations pay their war debts, but bobbed hair is here to stay. Mr. Cooper is far from being a novice tonsorial artist. Not he. Just thirty-eight years ago, he first thrilled to the click of scissors manipulated by himself on the head of an anxious customer. Those were the days of the famous old Merchants' hotel of Omaha, frequented by the late William F. Cody better known as Buffalo Bill.

When the present craze for bobbed hair swept the country, barbers, in the opinion of Mr. Cooper, knew nothing about the business of bobbing hair. However, he says, they quickly learned. But with the advent of the short-hair styles Cooper chuckled loud and long. It was as new to him as a street-car ride is to a veteran motorman. Maids and matrons were playing right into his hands, for was he not a pioneer bobber? Cooper modestly admits knowing as much about bobbed hair as a certain pair of bearded brothers know about cough drops.

Turn back the clock.

It is the year 1889. Old men sport long beards and sideburns and old bobbed-hair craze lasted about two years and died a quick death. Why? Let Mr. Cooper explain.

sheik type, "the bobbed hair had begun to die out after a number of excellent ladies had been insulted by mistaken men."

The sheik lay supine in the chair as a pink massage cream was rubbed into his face.

"But before its popularity began to decline, I bobbed the hair of some of the best women of Nebraska and near-by states. Most of the barbering done in those days was the trimming of men's beards and mustaches. Terrible-looking things, too. A beard of any kind kills the expression. That is why most stage villains wear them.

"Do you know what hair is?"

The interviewer professed not to know. So did the sheik.

"Well, it's the dead part of the body. When you cut it off it does not hurt you. As an infant hair grows on your head. At the age of 20, it grows on your face and at 30 and more on your ears and eyebrows.

"People are getting away from long hair. If long hair is healthful why do the Army and Navy insist men in the service have it cut short? Even professors of music are cutting their hair short and the Chinese are whacking off their queues. A few Mexicans and Indians still wear long hair. The long hair has gone for good. Ain't that right, Jim?"

Jim, presider over the next chair, agreed.

"Why is bobbed hair so popular?" Cooper was asked.

"I'll tell you. This is a fast age and one of rapid transportation. Women have no time to fool with long hair so they cut it short. Looks nice and is sanitary."

"Which style of bob is most popular?"

"The French bob and the King Tut bob. Most of my customers, however, want me to study their individuality and cut their hair to advantage. That's the best way.

"My oldest customer? Oh, about 78 years of age, I think. Nice old lady, too. Steps right out with the youngest of 'em. Bobbed hair lends youth. Depend on it, it's here to

Cheerful Optimism of Beautiful

The first of the beauties to decide there was no use in trying to be happy with a husband so lively as His Grace of Westminster.

most fashionable residential districts in London. Most Americans who have attained social prominence in London and sev-ing about the English channel and the Mediterranean in an enormous schooner called "The Flying Fish," which he has converted from a merchant ship into a yacht. He carries along a crew of boon companions of both sexes and puts into such resorts as Monte Carlo or Deauville, where he sits up all night and gambles with hundreds of thousands of dollars and amuses himself in any way he sees fit. The duke is quite an autocratic sort of person, and when he gets tired of any man or woman companion he says, "Out you go!" and emphasizes the remark, if necessary, with the physical argument.

The duke is quite an athlete, has been through wars and explorations, and his invitations to get out are usually accepted.

THE duke has sold all sorts of heirlooms, art treasures and family property. The inference is natural that he has been using up the proceeds in carousing with a host of charmers at Monte Carlo and other resorts.

For instance, he sold Gainsborough's "Blue Boy," the most famous picture in the family collection and one of the greatest pictures of the old English school, to the American collector, Henry E. Huntington, for $1,000,000.

This price must have paid for a merry cruise on the Mediterranean and several nights' play at Monte Carlo. When it became known in London that the duke had sent the national masterpiece out of the country a crowd of respectable looking people held an angry demonstration in front of the Westminster town house, Grosvenor house, and booed loudly. The duke's answer to this was to sell the family mansion and move into a smaller one.

The king and queen are greatly worried that a man of the duke's ancestry and position should behave as he does, losing one duchess after another through the divorce court and scattering his wealth at the Monte Carlo gaming tables. These are not times when royalties

IT IS reported that the Baroness Marietta de Styrcea, a lovely Rumanian noblewoman and one of the most attractive figures in the gay life of Monte Carlo, Cannes and other French resorts, is to be the next wife of the beauty-loving Duke of Westminster.

It is true that the duke is not yet divorced from his present duchess, but she has already begun suit, mentioning four correspondents, and there is every reason to expect she will be successful in her suit, as the duke has always been a likely target for divorce proceedings. The baroness has already mentioned to her friends that she expects to be the next duchess, and, while a fashionable young French dressmaker and one or two other ladies have suggested the same prospect, there is some ground for believing that the baroness is the likeliest entry.

What puzzles most people is to understand why the Baroness Styrcea should want to venture into matrimony with the duke. Is her boldness to be admired or criticized? Does she expect to hold him firmly in her entrancing bonds? For nearly thirty years he has been involved in entanglements with women which have been matters of general knowledge, and two wives have found that they and social leaders can afford to disregard popular sentiment.

But the duke is not in the least concerned about the royal anxiety. He does not seem to give a rap about the safety of the throne and the conservative classes.

"Come along, all you little loves and jolly rascals. Stay with me while the money lasts! After us the deluge!" is the duke's invitation to the gay world of Monte Carlo, Nice and Cannes.

And this is the duke with whom the charming Baroness Styrcea is expected to embark on the treacherous sea of matrimony.

The last Duchess of Westminster to part from the duke was one of the party that accompanied the Prince of Wales on his recent visit to America. She had begun suit immediately before starting for America and named as correspondents one American dancer, one English countess who was formerly a Gaiety girl, one lovely Irish widow and one Parisian dress-maker. This is surely a list that ought to give the Baroness Styrcea occasion to pause and reflect. But women will take a lot of chances with a duke.

When the duchess started her divorce proceedings the duke promptly locked her out of Bourbon house, the smaller London house which he occupied after selling the great family mansion. Shutting his wives out of the house is one of the duke's arbitrary ways.

An American husband under similar conditions is expected, according to divorce etiquette, to leave his wife in possession of the house and go away to a hotel or some other quiet place.

The duchess went to court to assert her right to the house, and also to two vases and a picture which the duke accused her of taking away. In her complaint she said:

"So far as my having taken a picture and two vases is concerned, I can only say that they belong to me and that I had the right to take them. The picture was a portrait of myself. My action against the duke, which is based on his brutality and other improper acts, will be heard and the real facts will then appear.

THE court decided that the duchess, having begun divorce proceedings against her husband, had no right to live in his house and ordered her to stay out.

The present duchess was the wife of Richard Rowley, whom she divorced before she married the duke. She was the daughter of Sir William Nelson and belongs to an excellent and wealthy family, although not of such tremendously exalted position as the Duke of Westminster. She moves and dances in the liveliest set of English society.

She is said to have been very much in love with the duke when she married. There were many well-known things in his past that ought to have made her cautious, but she did not know as much as she does now.

Baroness Styrcea, the optimistic Rumanian beauty, who is expected to add another interesting chapter to her already astonishing career by becoming the third Duchess of Westminster.

that the duchess, whose health was delicate, went on a cruise on the duke's famous yacht, expecting to derive great benefit from the delightful air and sunshine of the Mediterranean.

The party of friends whom the duke invited on board to entertain the duchess filled her with amazement. Conspicuous among them was a beautiful Spanish dancer, noted for the warmth and abandon of her wonderful dances and for her free-and-easy manners and conversation. The duke passed an immense amount of time in the dancer's society and enjoyed, it is said, some very intimate exhibitions of her art.

This conduct of the duke almost under her nose, or at least just on the other side of a thin ship's partition, irritated the poor duchess beyond endurance. So one fine evening she marched into the dancer's room and threw all her belongings out of the window into the sea.

Dresses, scarlet scarfs, lingerie, jewels—all went out into the devouring sea.

The duke apparently regarded this act of the duchess as a mutiny against him as master. He ordered the yacht to put into the nearest port, and there the duchess left the ship! There it is understood the duke replaced at large expense all the articles belonging to the dancer that had been thrown into the ocean.

The Duchess of Westminster in her action complains of the duke's "mode of living."

"His conduct led me to have a conversation with him," she asserts. "He then told me he did not intend to alter his mode of living and told me to leave the yacht."

The present duchess might have formed some idea of what to expect from the experience of the previous large sum of money to console her for disappointed hopes of becoming a duchess.

duchess. When the duke was twenty-three years old and had just inherited the property and title of his grandfather, he became engaged to Miss Constance Cornwallis-West, a great beauty. She was the daughter of that Mrs. Cornwallis-West who was a conspicuous figure in the old Marlborough house set in the gay days when King Edward VII. was Prince of Wales.

When the Boer war broke out the young duke went to South Africa and there became entangled in the charms of the beautiful and notorious Mrs. Atherton, wife of a cavalry colonel in the British army. She later blew out her brains when she found that her charms were fading. "Mamie" Atherton was about twelve years the duke's senior, but in spite of that everybody knew that he was imploring her to arrange a divorce with her husband and become his wife.

Miss Cornwallis-West, who always had plenty of spirit, broke her engagement. Then the Prince of Wales and high army commanders used their influence and forced the young duke to beg his fiancée's pardon and come to his senses. Mrs. Atherton received a

The episodes of which the duchess complains would make a lively library.

The duke's engagement to Miss Cornwallis-West was renewed and the marriage took place in due course. It did not remain a happy and peaceful one for any length of time. The duke always wanted to be surrounded with a gay and rowdy crowd of actresses and sports, and while the duchess was far from being an austere recluse, his companions did not suit her.

They became strangers and lived at opposite ends of the same vast house in London. Then one night after the duchess had been out to a ball by herself and had come home at 3 o'clock in the morning the duke shut her out of his house. That is exactly what he has been doing with his latest duchess.

The duke's great friend at this time was Miss Gertie Millar, of the Gaiety theater, then the wife of the composer, Lionel Monckton. He looked up to Miss Millar as a charming companion and a model of all the domestic virtues, "jolly without being vulgar." One day he astonished some of his companions by declaring that his

Fears That This Tremendous Energy Might Actually Destroy the World

LITTLE pool of water the size of a chocolate caramel contains more energy than a billion horses. If we could control the force locked up in those few drops we should have power sufficient to run 500 snorting locomotives for an hour. Safe in the hands of nature such energy has existed in water ever since water began, and not only there but in every atom throughout the universe, which means in all nature from the tip of a new-born baby's finger to a piece of iron ore.

The earth and the whole material universe are teeming with energy hitherto unavailable, but at least some of which scientists hope soon to succeed in releasing. Already one distinguished physicist has changed a little of the metal tungsten into helium gas.

If he succeeds in making this transformation on a larger scale, and thus is able to set free vast new stores of energy, we shall find ourselves in a new world. For locked up in the invisible fortresses of matter is force unbelievably powerful. The greatest source of power of which man has ever dreamed would be at the disposal of those who could so break up the elements of which all material things are made. And then if this release can be obtained at a small cost our wood, coal, oil and generated electricity will step back into antiquity.

The stokers of great trans-Atlantic liners would come up to live in a cool and pleasant upper world. They would be needed no longer. Miners ascending from the caves of earth could remain in the sunlight. Never again would they need to return for the hard, black fuel that Nature has taken hundreds of millions of years—three geologic ages—to create.

The forests of maple and spruce, the white birch, the poplar and the oak could stand to their majestic ages without fear of the woodman's axe. Man would have obtained another source of power relatively limitless in extent. From a little fragment of wire would come energy equivalent to the burning of a thousand trees.

This highly concentrated power is a potential part of every fragment of matter—animal, vegetable or mineral; gas, liquid or solid. It is latent in the atoms of which every substance is composed, and which, although invisible, we know to be composed of still smaller bodies, called electrons, which are continually whirling at a speed that often reaches 20,000 miles a second.

But does science dare release this enormous reservoir of highly concentrated power? Is it wise or safe to set it free and attempt to turn it to man's uses?

MANY scientists view with grave alarm the growing success of the efforts physicists are making to master the mighty secrets the atom holds. They fear that if science succeeds in releasing this new energy it will have started something it cannot stop.

It is possible, they think, that the series of transformations which will follow the unlocking of the atom's hidden power will prove something too tremendous for man to control—something which will sweep away his civilization and eventually, perhaps, destroy the earth itself.

Nature, once aroused to shake loose these mysterious forces may rise in stupendous power and destroy the men who boldly tickled her. We may learn enough about these energies to set them free, but not enough to clamp back the lid when we have had sufficient of this marvelous discovery.

"Should the research worker of the future," says T. W. Astén, the well-known English physician, "discover some means of releasing this energy in a form which could be employed, the human race will have at its command powers beyond the dreams of scientific fiction, but the remote possibility must always be considered that the energy once liberated will be completely uncontrollable and by its intense violence detonate all neighboring substances. In this event the whole of the hydrogen on the earth might be transformed at once and the success of the experiment published at large to the Universe as a new star."

Suppose this great experiment did not get away from us, that the scientist would be able to keep the new energy under complete control. Might it not still prove a curse to the world instead of a blessing?

The picture of what might happen if some unscrupulous man or group of men should monopolize this new power and ruthlessly turn it to their evil purposes is an appalling one.

But in spite of the possible grave dangers involved the effort to release the atom's power goes steadily on. Many workers in physics and chemistry are trying to crack this exceedingly difficult nut, to batter down what we might call the strong box of the microscopic atom and lay bare its secrets.

When you understand that the tip of your little finger contains many more than fifty million billion of atoms, it does not seem quite so incredible that the carbon, the calcium, the water constituents and other elements of which that finger is composed have locked up within them forces which if suddenly released could blow you to pieces.

There is more reality in the world that is invisible than there is in matter which we see and hear and feel, because at bottom all matter is composed of invisible atoms. When enough of these atoms get together we may feel them as wind upon our cheeks, or see them as steam over the tea kettle; when still more of them get together we can see them better

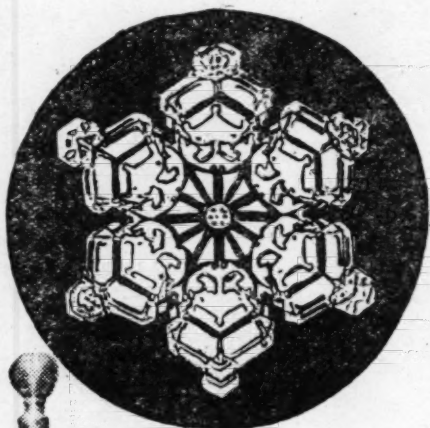

This express train is traveling at what we think the great speed of sixty-five miles an hour. But the electrons in the atoms which form the steel in the engine and cars, the coal in the tender, the upholstery in the coaches and even the flesh and bone of the passengers and crew are revolving at the rate of 20,000 miles a second. The locomotive shown is one of the most powerful man has been able to devise, but the millions of atoms in the snowflake pictured next page are believed to contain more power than 30 such locomotives as this can produce.

as liquids like water, or wine, or milk. Still more of these atoms packed closer together give us the solids of earth, the wood and the coal, gold, silver or radium.

Atoms are no strange remote creatures then, but the simple little units of which we and our world of matter are composed. If we would understand how science hopes to get great energy from such a common little bit of invisibleness let us imagine that we can see within one tiny atom.

Let us think of it as a hollow ball near the center of which is a little nucleus. All the rest of the ball is empty except for a tiny star—an electron—circling about the nucleus. And that is the whole story. A little nucleus with a star-like electron whirling about it in space, and this on a scale so small that we should never be able to see it.

Science's ingenious device for showing in an electrically lighted globe the arrangement of the electrons that form the atoms composing any of the fifty-four simplest elements.

Remarkable photograph of what happens when a narrow beam of X-rays liberates electrons from atoms of matter—an experiment which proved that very intense electric forces exist within the atom.

THE only difference between one atom and another atom consists in the number of these star-like electrons that circle around within it, and in the size of the nuclei. An atom of gold is just like an atom of oxygen except that the gold atom has seventy-nine starry electrons and a heavier nucleus, while the oxygen has but eight electrons and a smaller nucleus.

We have never found an atom with more than ninety-two of these whirling star-electrons. Radium is the substance with the ninety-two, and it is the heaviest element known.

If you were to call a roll of the ninety-two atoms you might start with the atom that has but one whirling electron star within it. Hydrogen gas would answer "Present" to your call. Next if you called for the atom that has two electrons, helium gas would say "Here." Lithium (of drug store fame) would plead guilty to having three electrons, beryllium (from the beryl) would admit that it had four, and so on until you passed the ninety-second.

Along the way oxygen would answer to number eight, silver would lay claim to just forty-seven electrons whirling within its atoms, and tungsten be tungsten. But what has it become? Seventy-two electrons have been knocked away, and seventy-two from seventy-four leaves two. Let us call the roll then once again. What is the atom that contains two electrons we inquire? Helium answers, It is I."

The fate which H. G. Wells pictured for this earth when the people of Mars bombarded it with their death-dealing cylinders only faintly suggests the catastrophe which may follow the release of the stupendous power stored in the invisible atoms that form the basis of all matter.

And so in a chemical laboratory Dr. Wendt has already succeeded, he says, in changing one element into another. He has transformed the metal tungsten, of which many electric light filaments are constructed, into helium gas which the nation's great dirigibles have made famous. And, most important of all, this process effects a tremendous release of energy. So firmly are the seventy-four electrons within the tungsten atoms that to knock out those electrons must liberate vast stores of power.

FROM other quarters we hear of mercury changed into gold by Adolph Miethe; sodium, aluminum or nitrogen broken into helium nuclei by Rutherford, of England, and always with release of great energy.

Many physicists and chemists believe that further study of the mysterious atoms is going to make it possible for science to realize the dreams of the old-time alchemists and transform the baser metals into gold or silver. But the most important result to be achieved from the atoms doubtless lies in the lease of the power which they contain.

What science has lately learned about the infinitely minute solar systems and star clusters of which the atoms consist has completely revolutionized the science of physics.

Not since Copernicus proved that the earth is not, as had long been thought, the center of the universe, has there been so complete a revision of scientific theories.

WHY coal is black and gold yellow, why steel is strong and wax weak, why gasoline is explosive and asbestos will not burn—all these and many other interesting differences in the kinds of matter that compose the world are explained by a study of the atoms.

IL PAINTINGS and statues of beautiful women promise to become things of the past—at least as far as those who wish to know precisely how the originals look are concerned; how their heads are poised, how graceful the lines of their necks and shoulders and how harmoniously every curve in their bodies blends with the others.

Even the photographs of wives and sweethearts, sisters and daughters which so many men cherish will either be done away with entirely or supplemented by wax models, actual impressions of their heads, or if desired their whole bodies, which will preserve with mathematical accuracy every curve, every dimple that the contour of their flesh and bone reveals.

With the aid of artificial hair of the correct shade and texture, of appropriate jewelry and of a costume such as the woman in real life would wear, these wax models can be made realistic enough to deceive for a moment even their originals into thinking they are viewing their flesh-and-blood twins.

The enthusiasm for wax models of women is the result of new methods of making them. And, curiously enough, it has sprung up almost simultaneously on both sides of the Atlantic.

On this page today is shown the photograph of the wax model which Countess Pallavicini recently had made of herself for a holiday gift to one of her friends. Its lifelike and artistic qualities have attracted so much favorable attention in the fashionable set in which the countess moves that many other women are planning to have their physical charms preserved in the same way.

Other photographs on this page show the making of wax models of beautiful young women in a California establishment that is specializing in the new method. For the present all the models that are being produced here are designed for use in show windows and for other commercial purposes, but soon there is expected to be a growing demand for "portrait" models for gifts and to fill places in private collections.

"Sitting" for a photographer is frequently rather difficult work, and posing for a sculptor or painter is almost always arduous and tiring. Posing for one of the new wax figures is far the hardest of all, but most women will be eager to attack its difficulties when they see what charming images of the human face and figure can be made in this way.

In making a wax model of a living woman the first task is to get a complete plaster cast of her. First, the flesh is coated with a preparation which, while permitting the plaster to sink into every crevice and register accurately every curve, will prevent its adhering too closely to the skin and enable the operator to withdraw it easily as it hardens.

In making a wax model of the whole figure the plaster cast is made in sections, the legs, arms and trunk being the first parts to be attacked. The head, being the most difficult of all to cast, is left until the last.

Of course, the job of applying the soft plaster is one that cannot be hurried. It must be allowed to remain on the flesh for some time until it is hard enough to remove without breaking.

During all this time the woman who is being modeled must remain perfectly motionless in the exact pose she wishes to be seen in the wax image. This is not easy, particularly when the arms have to be upraised or held in some other unusual position.

In fact, it requires a woman of considerable strength and endurance of muscle and one with complete control over her nerves to maintain the motionless attitude long enough to make the cast.

THE making of the cast of the head is the most difficult of all, both for the operator and the model. On account of the abundant hair on a woman's head it requires considerable skill and the use of a number of ingenious devices to register in the plaster the contour of her skull as it would look if she were completely bald.

While the plaster is on the head she breathes through a very small tube inserted in the mouth or nose. And from the minute when the application of the plaster is started the model must keep on her face exactly the expression she wants to appear in the wax image.

The slightest movement of the muscles may be ruinous, giving the cast a grotesque or ugly expression instead of the one of lifelike beauty which is desired. One must have the knack of freezing one's features into any given expression and keeping them thus for quite a time in order to make this part of the work a success.

As soon as the plaster cast of each part of the body is completed it is cut into sections and removed, to be joined together again and fitted to the casts of other parts when it is time to pour into them the wax from which the figure is molded.

The casting itself takes far less time than the making of the plaster mold. By experts it is accomplished with quite amazing speed, and, voila!—the figure is complete, except for the lack of a coiffure, of eyebrows and eyelashes and of a lifelike color in the skin and eyes.

The head continues to present the most serious difficulties. Often the twitching of some little muscle will have marred the contour of the face or neck, and if this defect was not remedied in the cast before the wax was poured in, it has to be attended to now.

This is a task that can be successfully done only by some one with a thorough knowledge of anatomy and considerable skill as a sculptor.

When the face is pronounced satisfactory the same sculptor turns his attention to the bald top and the back of the head. These are compared with the head of the original, and very often a little wax has to be deftly applied or removed in certain places in order to simulate more accurately what the phrenologists call "bumps."

Now it is time to call in the hair dresser, who prepares a suitable coiffure and glues it securely to the waxen head. This can be, and in the case of portrait images often is, made from some of the model's own hair.

When the hair is in place an artist is summoned. With oils, water colors and tempera he reddens the lips and cheeks and gives the flesh of the whole body the characteristic glow of perfect health. On the fingers and toes he paints an artful simulation of nails.

The most difficult part of the artist's work is the coloring of the eyes. The color of a beautiful woman's eye is an elusive thing, and in order to duplicate it as nearly as is humanly possible a careful study of the eyes of the original is necessary.

Now all that remain to be done is to supply the wax figure with a gown, lingerie, shoes and stockings and whatever jewelry is desired for the fingers, wrists, neck, ears and hair.

When the wax figure of Countess Palavicini was completed a few months ago she had it clothed in one of her favorite gowns, one which she herself had worn in the flesh. The jewels to go with it were expensive and specially made replicas of some of the finest pearls, diamonds and other gems in the countess' famously large and valuable collection.

Figures intended for modistes and merchants are, of course, shipped from the maker's studio quite unclothed. The purchasers dress them in whatever gowns seem best suited to the particular style of beauty each figure displays.

Since Countess Pallavicini has herself modeled in wax and other social celebrities began following her example some of the French and English humorists have been having some good-natured fun with the idea.

One Parisian writer thinks that Henri Letillier, the French multimillionaire and famous connoisseur of beauty, may like to establish a museum in which to preserve wax figures of all the women he has admired and loved.

"But," the writer facetiously points out, "the building to house this collection will have to be one of tremendous size."

Another of the jokesters thinks that every American millionaire's mansion will doubtless soon be provided with a "gallery of the dear departed"—a gallery in which will be ranged portrait statues in wax of all the wives of whom he has been deprived through death or divorce.

There may be more truth than fiction in both these jests. Quite possibly these wonderfully lifelike wax figures of living women will be put to both these uses, as well as to many others that have yet to be suggested. Just now, however, the chief purposes they serve are to gratify the vanity and love of novelty of wealthy society beauties and to supply the needs of merchants, dressmakers and milliners for really artistic and lifelike figures on which to display the newest gowns and hats.

Everybody who ever visited the old Eden Musee in New York or the famous Mrs. Jarley's Waxworks in London knows how true to life wax figures can be made. And the figures in both these collections were modeled by sculptors who had in most cases never seen the originals and were obliged to rely on photographs or paintings for their guidance.

They were never made, as the new portrait statues are, by taking plaster casts of the actual flesh and then molding the wax from these.

Until lately a large part of the wax models used in stores and elsewhere in this country have been imported from France. Their originals were, of course, almost invariably French women.

This has long been a matter of regret, for the French woman is built on lines quite different from her more active, more athletic, more robust American cousin. Thus gowns designed especially for American women can never be shown to quite such good advantage on figures modeled from French beauties.

When our show windows are filled with made-in-America figures, figures which duplicate in wax all the pleasing curves and smiles of red flesh-and-blood American girls, the old story of the inebriated clubman will have more point than ever before.

This clubman, as you will probably remember, was found by his friends one night carrying on a violent flirtation before the window of a fashionable department store. In his tipsy condition he had mistaken one of the wax manikins that smiled so fascinatingly at him from behind the plate glass for a real live beauty!

INSTALLMENT VI.

WHEN you wire Clamart right off," Tom said. "I'll have the message sent tonight. I might as well tell you, Olly, that it's my ambition to safeguard that girl for the rest of our lives."

Olivant reached out and gave his host a strong, warm handclasp. "I guessed as much, Tom. My best wishes and love and envy and all that sort of thing. You're the man to do it. Cast in that perfect mold. You'll make her safe and happy."

Tom sighed like the bellows that his Vulcanesque frame seemed designed to blow. "Well, I think that, and you may be good enough to think it, old boy. But the deuce of it is, will Shelby ever think it?"

"Give her time, old King Cole. She's just a kid yet. Ambitious for high adventure, something original and spectacular. She'll never forgive me for spoiling her chance of getting herself shot by these brigands that were beating it with the contents of her father's till."

"She likes you, though, Olly."

"In spots," Olivant amended. "She's got my measure and put a name on it. A buffer. That's what I've always been, and probably as much as I can ever hope to be."

"Cut out the sob stuff, Olly. Get this crime crusher of yours out here and turn him loose. What is he like?"

"Not so raw. He knows his forks. I've a hunch you'll cotton to him. He's the only man I've ever met who could back Mr. Jedburgh into his corner and make him pant."

"Well, I'll be glad to welcome him," Tom said, and rose.

Olivant was moved by an impulse to tell his host about Clamart, his origin and stormy past and the factors that had led this former master thief to turn renegade of a super-criminal class to become the loup garou of society's most sinister forces of evil. But such a recital, even in the detail, to do Clamart full justice, would take half the night, and Tom was tired, not only from the long, rapid journey but at this moment weighed down with the responsibilities of proprietorship in the present coal crisis. Olivant felt that really it was a shame

A Story of Mystery, Supermen, Arch Fiends and Criminals. A Novel That Will Hold You Until The End to burden him at all with added cares.

So he merely said, "Good night," noting as he did so that even Tom's craggy face could show fatigue, despite the sort of man mountain of coal and iron that he was.

In response to Olivant's wire, Clamart arrived the next afternoon. Olivant asked Shelby to drive with him to the main line station, about four miles down the valley. He did not tell her that Clamart was the criminal expert whom he had already mentioned, merely saying that he was a consultant in a business affair that he was working up with Mr. Jedburgh, and since Tom had kindly extended his hospitality to him this would enable Olivant to prolong his visit without neglecting his work.

BUT although Shelby evidently suspected nothing of Clamart's real errand there, it soon became evident to Olivant that she was more than casually interested in this new guest. She seemed to feel instinctively the dominant force of this man, who had not only redeemed himself but on several occasions rendered tremendous service to society.

Clamart was forty-two or three, but in his physical aspect appeared not over thirty-five. The stresses through which he had passed had not aged him, and he had never been self-indulgent even in the wild old days when most of his type, not knowing at what moment they might find themselves deprived of life or liberty, tried to crowd as much as possible of both into those periods that followed a successful coup.

As the three drove back to the house in a mountain buckboard drawn by two ambitious thoroughbreds of a stock that had been for generations developed by the Paynes and driven by an old time negro coachman, Olivant, sitting half turned with his elbow over the front seat, could see that Shelby had conceived an immediate admiration for Clamart.

Perhaps Shelby also felt instinctively something of this. Clamart seemed to excite and fascinate her with, of course, no effort on his part. The ultra feminine nature was quick to respond to the tang of age-old savagery in the man, and with all his self-effacement Clamart certainly had that.

She pointed out presently the picturesque little chateau on the top of the ridge. "There's the castle of the neighboring coal baron, Mr. Clamart."

He gave it a brief glance. "Effective, but out of period, Miss Poin-dexter. The battlemented Tudor tower of the east end might be permitted if it were a ruin. Who is the baron?"

"A new purchaser of an old and rather worked out mine, according to our host. His name is de Saxe. Belgian by descent."

"I've heard of him. A creative chemist and something of a philanthropist. Why do you suppose he wants a coal mine?"

"None of us can imagine. He's coming to luncheon tomorrow, and we can ask him."

"As I hear he was born in Russia and educated there, that might not get us very far," Clamart said. "The Slav is near enough the oriental to hold his actual motives in reserve."

"He's uncommonly good looking," Shelby continued, "and we saw him dining the other night with a most wonderful woman, also Russian, John said."

"That may have been the Countess Leontine," Clamart observed. "Washington is rather interested in the pair."

It struck Shelby that here evidently was a man of the world au courant with its gossip. She had expected a much less polished individual.

Clamart now surveyed the coal town of Payne with both an appraising and appreciative glance. "I like this sort of thing," he said. "There's a tremendous dignity to productive industry."

"When it is constructive," Olivant supplied, "and coal's that, even if you do plunder it from nature's storehouse. Now if this were a pulp mill town I'd hate it."

"Yes, or zinc mines where the fumes of the smelter kill the face of nature for miles around. One of these days we'll be able to get all we need without such wholesale destruction."

Chatting easily, they reached the house, to be greeted by Tom, a punctilious host.

AND here again Olivant perceived that curious conquest of sympathy with which Clamart seemed vested. It was again apparent when a few moments later he was presented to that gracious silver birch who was Mrs. Payne. This lady was of the type to impress one as more virginal than most present day maidens, despite the fact that she had borne four stalwart sons and a daughter. Some mothers are like that, a quality of soul shining through. They seem to be mothers first, then to be the children of themselves with their children, the loving older sister.

What was there about Clamart, Olivant wondered, that gave him this grip on such sweet folk? They seemed to accept him as of their own guild, the pure soul that his had not been. They offered him their friendship and confidences where the constabulary of the country, to whom his past was known, would not take him on as an ally for the maintenance of law and order.

Alone with Clamart in the quarters assigned him, a suite adjacent his own, Olivant asked, "What have you been up to, Frank?"

"I have talked to a couple of high lights of the Chemical foundation and another in the department of scientific research."

Olivant had hoped Clamart would first investigate the attack in Jackson

"No, I've got past starting at the bottom and working up—reached the point where I'd rather start at the top and work down. That's better when you can manage it."

"You are sure about one, John, because you saw him in the restaurant and he saw you."

"He might not have been the same, at that. And about the other?"

Clamart made a little gesture of impatience. "The other was the bank thief who knocked you out, according to your description. This one I impersonated was a chunky beggar. Once I'd made sure what he was up to, I just gave him my fists as I went past, caught him on the angle of the jaw and dropped him cold. Then I hoisted him on to the bench, and left him there. "Well, I asked the first point blank if he thought it would be possible to impregnate the outer air with an odorless intoxicant that would bewilder people. He smiled, and asked me if our late enemies hadn't done that thing. Then I asked him if he thought it could be done from the tank of a single airplane, and he said not in the way I described because some of those present would probably be killed and others, who might have run out from houses, scarcely affected at all. He said that there were phosphogene poisons with a delayed action that would serve a military purpose but not an immediate one. I didn't get much satisfaction out of him."

"How about the other?"

"The other was a meteorologist. I asked him if he thought it was within the possibility of chemistry to do anything to the air constituents that might alter their proportions enough to interfere with the mental faculties of the people thereabouts, give them an oxygen jag, or anything like that."

"Did he guess what you were driving at?" Olivant interrupted.

HE was saved the trouble by my telling him. First he said it couldn't be done—that the diffusion of those gases was too rapid. Then he hedged by saying that perhaps it might be done, but only with an enormous amount of apparatus. He mentioned an instance of the great forest fire at Porcupine where the combustion sucked all the oxygen out of a mine in which a lot of people had taken refuge, so that they were asphyxiated. I suggested then that it might be done chemically with a reagent tremendously avid for oxygen, but he said that nobody had discovered anything to do that on any such scale."

"Somebody might have, though," Olivant muttered.

"That's just it. Somebody might discover almost anything nowadays—how to detonate explosives at a distance, or to crack the earth's crust by combusting the oil pools under it, or degravitate ponderous objects, or sear us with rays or jar us apart with vibrations. I'm beginning to believe that the prelates of holy church were right in the dark ages when they burned anybody suspected of having got the formula to some of God's great natural forces."

"Well, I'm beginning to think that Brother Humboldt has, and that de Saxe is Humboldt. What does he want of this mine?"

"I don't know, unless to store his magic in. Nowadays you can't protect a factory or warehouse or laboratory from investigation. But if you had anything to hide or even to make, you might do it in the galleries of a mine."

"Have you seen Leontine?"

Clamart frowned. "No," he answered shortly. "But I've seen de Saxe."

"Just what do you mean by that cryptic statement, Frank?"

"He's a superman. I think possibly the superman. Leontine is the ultra feminine woman, the most absolutely feminine creature you can imagine, the very essence of feminine substance, like Isis in Egyptology and Frigga in Norse legend. I watched those two in the Elysee, and while I don't want to be disloyal to my good pal, I'll tell you, John, that it made me feel—well—well, as I've felt before once or twice about running the trail alone."

"I get you, Frank."

"In one way, I was glad," Clamart said, "because it cut both ways. No man is immune from such a woman as Leontine while he's still a man, and I should say this de Saxe or Humboldt is that. Leontine may be playing with him, and then again she may not. Some very few women are like electro magnets, so that they have only to throw the switch to give the man a tug, while others are constant magnets always attracting but less strongly. Leontine is the former. Very few full powered men could desist being her armature when she chooses to throw the current through. De Saxe has probably told her a good deal, but how much she may see fit to tell me is another story."

"Then you feel pretty sure de Saxe is Humboldt?" Olivant asked.

"No, but I would if I could get hold of something to associate de Saxe with these two robberies."

"There's the waiter," Olivant said.

"THAT'S just what puts me off. If this waiter was de Saxe's man, why should he have rammed in there as a waiter and bribed the real one to let him get access to de Saxe? He needn't have gone to that trouble. It looks more as if he were an enemy to de Saxe, especially as de Saxe poured the iced coffee into the palm tub. There seems nothing to associate de Saxe with your episode, either out in Missouri or Jackson park."

"There is, though," Olivant said.

"What?"

"Shelby and I both noticed one peculiarity about the airplane that went over us, and I noticed two. Perhaps she did—that young lady does not tell everything she knows."

"I felt that even in our brief acquaintance," Clamart agreed. "What about it?"

Olivant told about their exchange of observation, written, that there be no question of accuracy. "It had wings like a turkey buzzard—the primary pinnates curving upward at their extremities. The evening of our arrival Shelby and I saw a plane with the same sort of wings circling down over that chateau on the hill. Later that night, when Tom and I were playing billiards, he told me de Saxe had arrived by airplane and that he was going to ask him to luncheon."

That's why I told him about you and asked for your invitation here."

"You're a good scout, John. It looks to me as if we might have such a big dragon by the tail that it's apt to turn and gobble us at any moment. What was the other peculiarity?"

Olivant smiled. "You keep your eye on the ball, don't you, Frank? The other interesting feature was that neither of these planes made any noise from the exhaust. This first one out west went flying low in a zone of low atmospheric pressure. By all rights its motor should have been working like the devil. The one last night was spiraling down, but all the same this mountain air was so still that we ought to have heard it ten miles away. But it wafted in and fluttered down as silent as a maple seed."

He looked up from polishing his nails.

"Don't do that silly trick, John," Clamart said irritably. "It's got lots of otherwise sensible people bumped off."

"And others zealously guarded," Olivant said. "It all depends on what you have to hide."

"That's so," Clamart said warily. "Sometimes I forget that I'm on the high level; that the technique of being in wrong successfully and the obverse side of the medal are so much alike that one often wonders which is which. I should say, though, that this pretty well settles it. You are an acute and observing young man, John, and Jedburgh showed his sense when he swore that he'd seen you kill that bum in self-defense."

Olivant's limp pose stiffened a little. "Mr. Jedburgh has qualified in a good many ways, Frank. What I want to know is, where do we go from here?"

"Up over the hill," Clamart said. "Over the hill to the—slaughter house."

The distinguished and mysterious Mr. de Saxe arrived for luncheon in a new and costly limousine that he had caused to be sent after him. It was driven by a French speaking chauffeur, whose dreamy face suggested a poet rather than a mechanic.

De Saxe made his salutations to Mrs. Payne in the courtly fashion of her youth and his eastern European breeding, bowing low over her hand but not kissing it. He was more modern in acknowledging his presentation to Shelby and to Tom's sister, Mrs. Williams, who had that day arrived, but without her husband, whose leave was to be taken later.

DE SAXE also greeted Olivant in courteous, friendly fashion. But when his eye fell on Clamart, although too self-contained to betray himself, there flashed across his handsome features an expression that contained, as it seemed to Olivant, covertly studying him, a smothered animosity.

It was gone instantly, but Olivant, and of course Clamart, knew there had been a recognition, and that de Saxe must be wondering why, of all persons, a former expert burglar, cracksmen, jewel thief, and cosmopolitan brigand of the most dangerous type could have found his way into that household, that stood for everything that was solidly and simply aristocratic, the best traditions that the country had to offer. It might be, Olivant thought, that de Saxe recognized in Clamart the fearful renegade of thieves who had smashed a strong criminal organization of the European upper underworld, and that both Clamart's name, a well known one in Paris, and his former lawless operations were known to him. In such a case de Saxe, believing Clamart to be there under a false assumption, would be apt to tell Tom about him at the earliest opportunity. Even a stranger, a foreigner, would feel under such obligation on being offered hospitality.

But these clashing emotions did not prevent the luncheon from being a delightful event, or de Saxe from playing his part with perfect poise and grace. He proved himself a direct and simple conversationalist, who was never for a moment banal or at a loss. His information on every topic discussed appeared to be that of a man who had made a particular study of it, and he came presently of his own accord to the query that was in the minds of all of them.

"I suppose you must wonder why an emigre to your country should buy a coal mine," he said. "The reason is simple. I have need of a great deal of coal of just this sort for a venture that has to do with its by-product when roasted at low temperatures. Part of it is in the experimental stage, but there is enough assured to protect me from loss."

"Then you don't intend to mine and market it?" Tom said.

"Not as coal," de Saxe smiled. "I don't want to alarm you for the future, Mr. Payne, even if such a thing were possible, but I should say that the reign of coal, merely as coal, is approaching its decline."

"I've heard quite a lot about that," Tom said. "One of our richest Americans, who has big holdings out here, is tackling a project of the same sort."

"Yes," de Saxe assented. "He promised us six cent gasoline. But I hope to promise you a one cent fuel that will not be gasoline. I say one cent because it is the coin of smallest denomination. I confess to being one of those dreamers who have visions of the emancipation of mankind from the problems of toil that retard his development and take the joy from life."

"Do you think that would be good for us?" Mr. Poindexter asked.

"That depends on whom you mean by 'us.' I am not referring to folk like our fortunate selves, but to the tired toiler."

Olivant struck in with the pleasant voice he knew so well how to make sound inconsequential.

"I suspect you of having used some of that new power in your plane, Mr. de Saxe. Miss Poindexter and I happened to be watching your arrival." He glanced at Shelby.

"Is it a glider?" she asked. "Because we saw you zoom without any noise."

Olivant could have chuckled. He glanced across at Clamart. Shelby was fibbing about the "zoom," this word taken in its airplane sense. De Saxe looked mildly surprised.

"Zoom, Miss Poindexter? I thought we'd kept a level, even course. But sometimes an air current sends up a light craft like mine that is really something of a glider, though equipped with motor power. Some of us have discovered the advantage to be gained from the elasticity of bird feathers; the upward spring at their tips supplying a forward thrust."

"Are others doing that?" drawled Olivant.

"I believe so," de Saxe answered, carelessly. He looked across at Clamart with a slight narrowing and hardening of his rusty iron eyes. "Are you also a coal man, Mr. Clamart?"

"Steel has been more my specialty in the past, Mr. de Saxe. My errand here has more to do with that. I hope you will not tell me that steel also is doomed as an industrial necessity."

"No," said de Saxe, and there was a slightly different timbre in his resonant voice. "I should say that for certain uses steel will always be the agent par excellence. For ships and buildings and bridges—and to serve the hand of the slayer."

"The primitive slayer," Clamart amended.

"Well, yes"—de Saxe sipped a little of the old Burgundy that Tom's grandfather had bought—"if some more enlightened method is not found for his suppression."

"I am glad to hear you say that, Mr. de Saxe," Mrs. Payne remarked. "It seems as if the first duty of science should be the abolition of war."

"It would be, madame, if higher science could always be vested in the higher type of man. Unfortunately those lower in evolution also have access to it. Intelligence and peace are inseparable. But the trouble is that men's minds may be intellectual without being intelligent. A great intellect might make itself the master of matter. But if it has not also intelligence, the danger must be very great." He glanced across again at Clamart, and only that discerning individual and Olivant felt the surcharge of an animosity that was there. "Are you, also, a chemist, Mr. Clamart?"

"Only a student," Clamart said quietly, "but I have enough imagination to appreciate the limitless possibilities of which you speak."

De Saxe raised his eyebrows. "Did I speak of them?"

"Perhaps I should have said imply. I quite agree with you that advanced knowledge in custody of the wrong person might be a serious menace. But there is one consoling feature. The alchemist cannot make himself immune from suppression. A stick or a stone in the hands of a primitive can always reduce him to the least common denominator of cold clay."

DESPITE the quiet casual tone in which this statement was made Olivant sensed the little thrill that went round the table. He glanced at Shelby diagonally across from him and also from Clamart. And Olivant was disturbed at the burning intensity he heard a faint jingling. With it he smelled the odor of man—wild man—unwashed, with sweat glands whose excretions were provocative. Mingled with the hostile scent was the harsh tang of native tobacco.

Without hesitation Sprague leaped for the bough that spanned the path directly overhead, gripped, swung himself up just as a strange figure came round the corner. The branch sagged and shook and the leaves rustled betrayingly, but a friendly gust came drifting up the jungle lane and made movement general.

It was a native puffing at a smoke tube as he strolled along. His legs were bowed, his stomach protuberant, and his arms almost reached his knee-caps. The limbs, from knee to ankle, from shoulder to wrists, were almost hidden under rings of brass, of shell and plaited grasses. There was a sliver of bone through the septum of his nose, and his earlobes were distended with great discs of pearl. Necklaces of teeth fell low over his pouter chest, teeth of dogs, of sharks—of men! Sprague caught the glint of gold, and ghost hairs raised along his spine, while his scalp tingled.

W. W. HILTON,
HILTON LABORATORIES

The savage's hair was black and shiny as a leather helmet with beeswax, plumed with white and yellow feathers that had been stemmed into the mass until it looked as if decorated with chrysanthemums. Aside from ornamentation he was stark naked save for carefully oiled and combed bunches of hair that were killed from a belt of fiber, tresses of virgins, beards of old men, gray and crisp beside the glossier locks.

He carried a netted bag over one shoulder, and he halted directly underneath Sprague's hide-out, putting down the bag and scratching himself as unaffectedly and thoroughly as a flea ridden dog before he tapped free the ashes of his burned tobacco on a horny heel, squatted low, and dumped out the contents of his carry-all.

Small calabashes, carefully stoppered, the skull of a child—so small that the infant could hardly have ever drawn breath—tufts of hair, a rattle gourd, a small round trade mirror, the brass wheels of a cheap clock, the dried claws of a crocodile, bits of wood, faintly luminous in the shade and odd shaped stones and roots.

HERE was a wizard beyond a doubt, probably the same Seto to whose visits Gill had objected. The tabu'd bush path was his sanctum, his dressing room. So Sprague concluded, watching him take colors from the calabashes, moisten them with spittle and apply them with brushes made of chewed twigs, critical of the effect, working as meticulously as any Broadway star.

Somehow the makeup enhanced the fierce outspring of the beaklike nose, the cruel bestiality of the mouth whose teeth were stained scarlet with betel juice and filed to fangs; the curious animal look of the eyes. Once

Sprague flattened, squinching back, fearful that he might be reflected in the little mirror—designed for the toilet of a white girl to powder her tip-tilted nose, used now to make a man-eating tribesman awful.

Sprague, perching ingloriously, waiting the pleasure of the native, watched him go jangling down the path at last, under the sign of the swinging skull, every motion establishing him as the cock of Amaru's walk; and followed, taking a round-about route through the palms to where he could see the laborers working, hear them as their heavy knives thudded through the nuts, splitting them, to dry the kernels in the sun.

Before he had reached them they stopped, grouping about Seto, who seemed to be showing them something on the ground. They parted grudgingly as the white man came up, eyeing him sullenly, without any show of discomfort at being caught neglecting their tasks, fidgeting with their big blades, opening up in a circle where Seto's apish eyes watched malevolently the gap that Sprague closed—careful not to step too far to permit a native to get back of him. He sensed deadly peril. A false move might bring one of those thick bladed knives thudding through his skull. He knew there was disposition to such slaughter fomenting in the sluggish brains of the naked men who stared at him so stolidly, making their palms itch and their fingers twitch to spill blood.

Then he saw what they had been staring at. A struggling beetle with a white splotch on its burnished back, struggling amid a horde of attacking ants, benumbed by poison, growing feebler every moment, jaws and nippers paralyzed, while the nimble ants swarmed to the kill.

Sprague guessed it a conjuration, affected not to see. He took out his camera and offered cigarettes.

"I like take pictures along of you," he said.

Contempt showed for a moment in Seto's eyes. All round the circle the eyes of the laborers flickered shiftily. The wizard reached and grasped the whole package deliberately, making a crucial challenge of the action. Sprague held on, loath to be so impudently looted, intending to pass the cigarettes about. The stolid figures on either side of him began to move—almost imperceptibly. If one got behind him.

Suddenly Gill came striding through the palms, Lyons following. The skipper's face was crimson as hair and beard. He was hatless, lurching a little—not so much as Lyons, who caught at the slim holes to steady himself—but hot with liquor, his temper boiling over as he leaped the last dozen feet, the kanakas scattering like chaff in the wind, the blue metal of Gill's guns gleaming as he pointed it at the unblinking, unmoving Seto.

"You git along from here!" exploded Gill, his voice an angry roar. "What name you come along this place—make plenty trouble? Damn you, I make you too much trouble! Git up."

THE wizard muttered gutturally, his eyes challenging the skipper's.

"I don't—don't I?" Gill bellowed. He stooped and sank his strong fingers into the elastic mass of Seto's hair, twisting it, yanking him to his feet and turning him about. "You git! Lyons, cover 'em. You, Sprague—ain't you got a gun? Take this one."

Sprague's fingers closed about the butt gladly. Lyons' hand was none too steady, and his gun's muzzle wobbled. Sprague rounded up the laborers, the weapon a potent baton to marshal them in line. Gill let go of the discomfited wizard and simultaneously kicked him viciously, so that he pitched to all fours, trying to scuttle away, the skipper jumping behind him, with kick after kick, until Seto turned on his back, his limbs waving. Cat-like, he bounded suddenly to his feet and was off through the grove far faster than his assailant could follow.

Gill came back puffing a little.

"Git to work, you!" he ordered the laborers. They went at their task like mechanical figures suddenly galvanized into life, with furtive glances at the white men and the spot where Seto had disappeared.

"You've raised hell now," said Lyons, and Sprague saw a glint of terror in his eyes. Gill guffawed.

"I've raised that wizard's bet an' called his bluff," he said. "If you can't git work out of yore boys, Lyons, I'll show you how. Give me my gun, Mister Sprague. What was Seto showing 'em?"

Sprague told him, but they could not find the beetle. Some ants were still crawling about, but the beetle had been kicked aside or crushed into the ground. He described it.

"Conjure stuff," said Gill. "There ain't no white spotted beetles. He put paint on it. Don't you see, the beetle was the white man an' the ants the men of Amaru. Tryin' to work 'em to layin' down on the job so's he could git what he wants out of Lyons, because Lyons is easy. I'd show 'em—with a blacksnake."

"You don't have to live here," said Lyons, licking dry lips. "It ain't you whose head's likely to smoke over Seto's fire. An' there's Helen."

"I ain't so sure you'll have to live here," retorted Gill. "As for Helen, I'll look out for her."

There was a look in Lyons' eyes like that in those of a cornered rat, but he said nothing while Gill drove the hands until the sweat sprang out of their black hides in streams and the noise of their chopping resounded, dully through the grove. Sprague watched, fascinated at the deft slicing of the green husks.

"They ain't got no guts," said Gill. "No more has Lyons. They've clubbed a few missionaries an' traders, but they've learned to leave the white man alone when he shows 'em he ain't afraid of 'em."

The curry at lunch was remarkably good. Wu, the tall Chinaman, served it silently and dexterously. Through it all Gill and Lyons drank gin and water and the skipper twitted the trader. There was more than just soft sand as Gill swung, grappling for him.

The Pearl of Amaru

Sprague sent one uppercut smacking true to the hair-cushioned chin, sank his left in the soft flesh below Gill's ribs, tore from the clinch as the skipper gasped, and went dancing back, noting the position of the trees about them, seeing the girl still there. She was not looking at him, but gazing intently at the sand at their feet.

Then Gill came with a rush, flailing, missing, clutching as Sprague dodged.

He could get him, Sprague told himself, he could get him if he kept away from those murderous, foul-fighting arms. The skipper was soft of body, for all his muscle. Fat and liquor—he was clumsy as a bargeman on his feet. But Sprague's straight left did not stop the next rush—there was a tree back of him. Gill's one hand closed on his hurt shoulder, squeezing sinew, flesh, and vein. The other reached for his throat. Struck up, clawing the flesh, it groped for his eyes. Gill's knee came up, trying to maim him, and Sprague put desperate force into one blow over the kidneys that made Gill grunt, one to the pit of his heaving belly, hard on the quivering ganglia, and the skipper went staggering back, floundering in the soft sand with uncertain feet and slow-moving, heavy legs.

HE had left his mark. Sprague's face was streaming blood as he darted in while Gill's guard was still open. A swelling grew like a fungus above the skipper's left eye. He spat blood, and Sprague's knuckles were red and raw. But he had his man; he had him, he exulted, as Gill strove to cover his head—but forgot to crouch. He drove him back with body punishment. The breath was out of the man; he sobbed as he backed with wild bludgeoning that the younger, more agile man avoided. There was more than that gone. The look in his eyes, wild enough, showed that the bully had found the shallow bottom of his courage. Beaten for the first time in his life, his gun gone, the craven in the man came out of its miry lair in his soul, hating the harder for being vanquished.

Sprague had worked him towards the spindling tree. In his triumph he forgot caution, forgot the crushing force of the sheer swing of Gill's big arm, backed by his weight, and he ran into a blind swing that caught him on the side of the jaw and sent him reeling, dazed, summoning his will to sustain him as he felt his senses slipping, his legs weaving under him, knees failing, arms weighted as if the fists were lead.

A cry came from the girl. It rallied him, and he swept an arm before his blurring eyes, standing wide straddled; the trees slowly ceased their wild dance, the earth coming solid under him, the horizon straight again.

It had seemed minutes, but Gill still stood, half blinded, swaying like a wounded bear, his arms a-swing, his brute face stupid, striving for breath. Sprague's wind was good. Strength surged back into him, and he leaped in with fists driving short and straight. One to the plexus, the other once again to the jaw, all his brawn back of them. Gill's head went back, the slanting palm trunk meeting it at the nape of the neck. His great body sagged as his beard fell on his chest. It drooped, seemed to telescope, and then he dropped like a length of chain to the sand, arms out, knees drawn up, quivering, senseless.

Sprague watched him for a moment like a tiger that has brought down its quarry; then turned to see Helen with her eyes ablaze, the gun that she had retrieved in her hand.

"What were you going to do with that?" he asked, pantingly.

"If—if he had won—I should have killed him," she said simply. "He meant to kill you." Her face softened. "Are you hurt?" she asked. The tone would have mended a broken limb, Sprague fancied.

"He nearly had me that last swat," he grinned, "but I'm all right—with a wash. Better give me that gun. Mine's aboard. I don't fancy I'll be welcome there. I'll trade with him. I don't think I've helped matters much at that, but—"

She put her hand on his arm and thanked him as he stood getting his lungs back to normal, conscious of the strain of the strenuous, unbroken fight.

"You'll come up to the house?" she asked.

"I'll see him go aboard first. He's coming to."

Gill rolled over on his back and lay still for a moment before he heaved himself up on one elbow and glared at them. Slowly he got to his feet.

"I'll kill you—you devil," he gritted behind swollen lips. "As for you, my gal, I'm not through with you or your lot of a father. I'll—"

"You'll go aboard and stay there," said Sprague. "I'm swapping guns with you. Meantime, you don't happen to have one." But he was conscious of a growing sense of failure. If the man sailed away, put in his deposition? The drunken Lyons had been the lover of the girl's mother. His disgrace would be hers, might involve her. His eyes grew hard and his finger tightened about the trigger. He slid off the safety. Gill was a brute. If—

"Get aboard," he ordered curtly.

Gill slouched off, spitting blood, lurching through the trees, calling his boat's crew. They watched him rowed off to the schooner before they went up to the house, where Wu met them, impassive even at sight of Sprague's face and his bloodied clothes.

"Your father he sleep, Missy Helen," he said.

"Thank you, Wu. Will you look after Mr. Sprague? And send for Tafulu to see me. Mr. Sprague will be here for dinner, Wu. There will be only three of us, if father wakes up."

Sprague fancied he saw the ghost of a smile in Wu's agate eyes as he turned away. Then he was under a shower, fresh linen laid out for him, and presently Tafulu came and pulled and kneaded him apart and together again until he got up fit and new, save for a few scrapes and bruises.

"Talofah, arii!" saluted Tafulu when Sprague was dressed. "It was a good fight." There was real respect in that arii—chief—and it did Sprague good.

"Did you see it?" he asked.

"Someone tell me," said Tafulu gravely, and Sprague knew who had told him.

The sun was down, the sky and sea darkening as if with the sweep of a great brush across the picture. Back of Lyons' landing the mountain purpled to obscurity, the sharp outlines of the crags melting, veiled with the scarves of night. The eager stars flashed out, reflected in the lagoon, the odor of the bush stole out on the landwind as the white-crested ghostly sea chargers mounted the reef and fell back broken, slightly luminous where the crashing foam struck the mass of seething water.

SPRAGUE and Helen Brent sat on the broad veranda, screened against mosquitoes. Lyons was snoring in his own room, sodden with sleep and liquor, his stertorous breathing mercifully dimmed by closed doors.

They talked in low tones because of the beauty of the night, because of the glamour of the tropics that—restored again for Sprague—enwrapped them, permeated them, thrilled them like soft music. It was a night for love. The Southern Cross, resplendent, hung like a jewel on the breast of night. The rhythmic rush of the sea on the barrier reef, the babble of the lagoon wash on the beach, the whispering wind in the palms, the perfume of the flowers, were in harmony with their feelings. As they realized their emotions, each lapsed into little silences, content in the other's proximity, realizing that from each there flowed a current that merged them, subtly changed them, filled them with prescience of delight to come.

There were other lights reflected in the lagoon than those of the stars. The lamps of the Halcyon, shining balefully through the ports and skylight, showed where Gill nursed his grievances and plotted his revenge. He could be counted upon for evil. His men would follow him. They were all natives of the type who would follow any one who bullied them. Fa, the half-Chinese cook—as opposite from Wu as darkness from light—would, Sprague believed, as lief slit the throat of a man as of a chicken.

Tafulu and Upiri came onto the veranda from the back of the house. The lamp in the large room, off which the porch opened, furnished a half light. By it Sprague saw that both of them carried rifles in the hollow of the right arm.

"Six men go along bush, Missi Heleni," reported Tafulu. "No can find them. They take knife. Amaru men, belong to Seto."

The girl roused herself, alert, efficient, brushing off the webbing of her dreams.

"The others, Tafulu? You locked them up? Searched for weapons?"

"Ai, missi. I not like those men go. Too bad kapitani kick Seto. I think trouble by and bye. Maybe soon. So, I catch rifle for me and Upiri. You give karatigi. I think better some dynamite, all same. Maybe no trouble—all right. Suppose trouble come—much better we fix."

"All right, Tafulu." She went inside the house.

"Going to make some bombs, in case Seto tries a raid?" Sprague asked the Samoan.

"Ai. Take dynamite, cut stick, make hapa stick, cut fuse—plenty short like this"—Tafulu indicated the length on his finger. "Split fuse, put match in—hapa match—fix cap. Then you wait they get plenty close up. Light match, throw quick." He clapped his palms together loudly. They all same dead fish on top laguni."

His pantomime was more vivid than his words. And Sprague had seen half-sticks flung, to explode just as they struck the surface of the lagoon and bring hundreds of fish stunned—some of them broken—to the hand net.

"You expect trouble tonight, Tafulu?"

"No can tell. Mos' time take one week maybe, make plenty dance, beat drum, get plenty mad—then maybe do nothing. If Seto too much mad—maybe he do something right away. Suppose he think long time he not do. Seto savvy too much bimeby Feriniki war motu come along. But the kapitani make him look too much small—too much fool in front along his own men. Seto not like that."

The French war canoe, as Tafulu styled the cruiser, was a poor preventive for Seto's loss of face, Sprague thought. Their best bet was the dynamite. If he ever took up planting where there were savages in the bush he decided to lay in a supply of tear bombs or an easily-exploded hand shell filled with mustard gas. A case of No. 7 grenades right now would make an attack negligible. Dynamite might do the trick, but it would be risky at close quarters.

The girl came back with a wooden box half full of cartridges.

"The dynamite caps, and fuse are all in the safe, Tafulu," she said. "I've got the combination, but the inner door locks with a patent key. I can't find it, and I can't get father to remember where he put his bunch."

"Maybe no trouble tonight," said Tafulu as he took the shells.

A hollow sound, partly muffled, came booming through the night as if to belie his assurance. Another followed—more—the deep vibrations of each encroaching on those of the earlier strokes—as a tapped pool ball at the end of a row transmits its force to all the rest. Boom-boom—BOOM-BOOM! BOOM!

DRUMS! Great logs, hollowed, with long slits for sound holes, carved into hideous grotesques; long tongued faces with shell eyes that caught the flare from the fires and torches. Naked, frenzied men dancing, stamping, leaping, flinging up arms that bore shield and spear, capering about the weird figure of their wizard, while the women shuffled, shuffled, in the shadow and added their shrill, monotonous voices to the deep chant of the tribesmen, lusting for blood, for flesh, for heads to hang in the hamal.

The big Samoans stood rigid, listening. The girl had stiffened but her hand stole out to reach and hold Sprague's in the dusk. He shook off the eerie spell the steady iteration of the drumbeats had cast upon him, a vague suggestion of terror brought up from remote ages.

The pulsing strokes filled the night. They dominated the heart beats of the listeners until the noise, that seemed mysteriously to come from no especial point but to issue from the earth, the sea, the sky, making all tremulous with sound, was at the current of their blood pumped through its arteries. Savage, barbaric, terrific, conjuring up a score of reactions of dread and fright, rousing through their senses primitive emotions that functioned while reason numbed. It was a hypnosis of sound upon the mind.

"We'll get rid of that," said the girl. "The longer you listen to it the louder it seems until it gets you going."

"You've heard it before?"

"Plenty of times. Whenever a tribe wants to make itself strong, they work themselves up night after night with drum dances. They send messages—challenges—out that way."

"Can Tafulu read them?" The Samoan answered for himself.

"No. I no can savvy that kind of drum talk. But that devil—devil drum. War drum all right. Tonight I watch. Upiru watch. We watch along chipe all same along Seto." He nodded down to where the chipe—the ship—swung at anchor with its lighted ports. "If they come they come mauta, they come matai," he added.

Helen Brent translated:

"He says they will come both ways, by sea and land."

"Kanaka not come along po—in night—too much afraid of devil in the dark. Maybe they come along lele while before sun come up."

The girl had opened the lid of a phonograph; put on a record.

"It won't disturb him," she said, with a little backward jerk of her head and a faint but unmistakable note of disgust in her voice. "And it will kill that drumming though you mightn't think it. Listen to the one and forget the other."

Will Sprague listened and forgot. Helen had chosen the record, surely not entirely by chance. It was the voice of a dead artist singing, rich and resonant, the voice of David Bispham, registered thousands of miles away, proving that art is lasting, life is brief and fame is not mortal.

*Drink to me only with thine eyes,
And I will pledge with mine;
Or leave a kiss but in the cup
And I'll not look for wine.
The thirst that from the soul doth rise
Doth ask a drink divine;
But might I of Jove's nectar sup,
I would not change for thine.*

Savagery subsided. Romance reasserted itself. The stalwart Samoans went away with their shells and their rifles, patrolling the mountain and the beach, mauta and matai.

Sprague slept on the veranda at his own request. The drums droned in his ears as he dozed off at last, and he fancied it was their sudden silence that awakened him. At least they no longer boomed. There seemed to be a faint stirring of the night, not just the wind, which had fallen, so that the reef breakers sounded like the drum roll of a dozen regiments; rather as if, in the dark, unseen scene shifters were deftly preparing for the next act. He swung from his couch, reaching for his shoes. And found Tafulu close beside him, materializing out of the shadows, offering him a rifle, cart-ridge clips.

"You fight along Big War?" the big Samoan asked.

"Yes." He took the rifle, handling it expertly, and Tafulu grunted with satisfaction.

"Pretty soon trouble," he said in a low voice. "Ehilli"—by which he meant Gill—"come along from chipe, I think."

Sprague strained his sight through the night. He thought he could see little patches of light show now and then on the water, glows that died out immediately as if oar strokes disturbed the luminous sea larvae. But he could not be sure, he could hear no rattle against rowlocks though Tafulu was plainly listening as well as looking.

"The drum have quit," he said.

"Quit long time. Too soon they quit." Tafulu's speech was ominous of danger and calm to meet it. Upiri, he said, was watching the mountain. Wu was barring doors and closing shutters. "Missi Heleni" was awake.

THE girl stole quietly out of the big room, now unlighted. Sprague met her.

"It's Gill," he said. "He's up to some devilment. Shall we show any lights or wait to see what he's up to? It must be getting on to sunrise."

He judged as much by the shifting of the stars as anything, save that vague stirring in the night. The girl had brought hooded night glasses. She focused them on the lagoon, gazed, handed them to Sprague. In his turn he saw something that seemed to crawl on the surface—like a big insect—the oars like feelers, little spurts of seafire flashing as the blades pulled through. And, faintly, as if gauze veil after veil was being lifted between them and the horizon, the night slowly grayed into the false dawn, objects began to assume blurry shape in the dim visibility. The boat was close in, making, not for the wharf, but the beach, where the low tide was turning to the flood.

Still there was no distinct light in the east, only a slow withdrawal of darkness over the sea, a paling retreat of stars, the loom of the land the hue of a Concord grape. Gill meant no good with his landing at the "weak hour" of the day, when men waked dazed and women fearful. They decided not to challenge the landing party until they showed their intent more plainly. Then—Sprague softly patted the stock of his gun in the dark.

ghostly, carrying an ax, refusing any other weapon.

"You shootee, maybe stop," he said. "Suppose no stop, ax velly good."

Upiri came gliding between the shrubs; dark, uncertain masses that revealed him more by movement than contrast. Somewhere in the house Lyons still snored.

Now the sky was olive, the sea dark as wine beneath it. The boat's keel had struck bottom, and the men were out, in the water, wading ashore, landed, coming up towards the terraces as Upiri, taking great breaths to fill his abused lungs, made his announcement.

Seto's men were coming—by mauta and matai, on foot and by canoe from the creek that ran back towards the tribal stronghold.

Boo-oo! BOO-OO! Here were no drums but the blat of conch shells—to left and right—on the mountain back of them—sounds like the bellow of a wounded monster. And dawn was on them in earnest. Craggs flushed, the east began to glow. A long canoe came down the lagoon from where the mangroves had masked it, spray flying from the deep-dug paddles, spears showing like the quills of a porcupine, making a great curve shorewards, its prow high curving, insets of pearl beginning to twinkle and a man standing erect, silhouetted back of the cowrie-studded stem. It was Seto, Tafulu said.

THE conches boomed again and gave place to savage yells. Stark naked savages—save for their wicker shields—came bounding along the terraces, making for the house. Shots came from lower down. Gill was perforce fighting for them with his crew, eight all told, against the forty warriors that had poured out of the big canoe. A clamor came from behind the great gate of the labor quarters, cries of fear.

Sprague and the two Samoans began to shoot in the growing light. Men fell rolling among the shrubs but scores came on, clubs brandished, spears hurtling through the screening of the porch, quivering in the wood. A few muskets roared, the heavy slugs going wild. Sprague looked for the girl, to make her take protection back of the waist-high boarding of the porch, but she had vanished.

He had no time to think why, the tribesmen were not to be denied close combat. They took no cover and their fierce shouting was like the jubilant shouting of fiends. Some of them were already on the top terrace making for the porch steps. Soon rifles would have to give way to pistols. Then Wu would have play with his ax. Sprague wished there were more of those biting blades. Once emptied, there would be no time to reload pistols.

The shots where Gill was fighting became scattering, seemed to cease. A pandemonium of yells floated up. The men from the Halcyon were wiped out.

"No fear of fire?" Sprague asked Tafulu with realization of the impossibility of all around defense.

"No fear," said the Samoan grimly. "Too much they want us."

Sprague fired the last shell in his rifle and began to empty his pistol. Tafulu and Upiri had already resorted to theirs. Even if every shot killed they would be overwhelmed.

A spear grazed Sprague's cheek and tore his ear. He saw Upiri ward off a shaft with his arm. Savages fell—and crawled on. More came up the slopes. He saw Seto, and Seto held a bloody, red-bearded head aloft.

"I've got it—found the key—under his bed!"

As she spoke Helen Brent put down on the floor of the porch the burden she had brought in the front of her skirt—sticks of dynamite, a snaky length of coiled white fuse, a knife, caps in an open box, matches. She cut the wrapped stick of explosive with the knife, hewed off short finger-lengths of fuse, split it; broke matches in half, inserted them with incredible speed. She started to crimp the caps with her strong, small teeth before Sprague's horrified gaze.

Then the rush came leaping, howling to the steps. The screen door was caught back and the mad melee commenced, clubbed rifles against war clubs beaked with shell, great raking spears studded with serrated sharks' teeth, handled by four charging men; Wu's ax biting, stained red.

Back, step by step, they fought, torn and bruised. A spear struck Wu in the shoulder and a crimson splotch welled out. Sprague caught his ax as it fell and split a warrior through the clavicle. Upulu braced Wu for an instant, and then the girl's voice rang out:

"Come back! On the porch!"

of her eyes as they rested on Clamart. De Saxe broke the momentary silence. "Then you do not believe in wizardry, Mr. Clamart?"

"Most emphatically not. I do not believe in any sort of spiritualism at all. But I believe in luck without being able to explain it. Whenever the world becomes at the mercy of any sort of evil genius, somebody has the luck to suppress him."

Here it seemed to Olivant was a defiance, a challenge of the boldest sort thrown down. It struck him that any man utterly without fear, to whom that emotion was unknown, did not need to have armies back of him, or science or spirits or anything but the same cold, dauntless courage that was as impervious to fear as a polar bear to cold feet. He felt now that Clamart believed de Saxe to be Humboldt, and that he was giving him the same sort of dare that Columbus gave the unknown. The rim of the world, the dropping off place might be a little ahead of him, but he purposed to look over it. Clamart, Olivant decided, would not have done this if he had not perceived himself to be known to de Saxe. But since that was the case, he did not intend to be intimidated by him. Clamart went farther than that. He was telling this man of mystery and hidden might that he was no more immune from a club or a rock than anybody else.

Olivant wondered then how much Shelby might suspect of what was going on. It did not go on any longer because de Saxe and Clamart, as if by tacit consent, had, after baring their teeth at each other, apparently decided to postpone their event. And Olivant had grasped at a different conception of de Saxe or Humboldt. He began to believe that the man in his arbitrary way was not the arch devil that he had supposed, but merely a sort of proud Lucifer—before the fall. He might even mean well by the world once he'd got it where he wanted it.

The luncheon finished pleasantly. Tom took his guest to look about a little and to offer modestly enough the benefits of a vast and intimate knowledge of coal conditions general and local.

Clamart disappeared. Mrs. Payne and her daughter drifted off for a doting on the so far only grandchild. Olivant found himself alone with Shelby.

"He's wonderful," Shelby murmured as they went out on to the veranda.

Olivant made pretense of misunderstanding. "Well, maybe so—"

"Well, he is. He practically told that man that for all his science he was no better than a bank robber if it came to misusing his powers."

"A bank robber—"

Shelby gave him a level look. "Don't stall, John. You're thinking of that turkey buzzard plane, too—and the way everybody seemed to be mixed up in their ideas. There's something phony about all this. Now suppose you tell me the truth about your friend, Mr. Clamart."

"But he's just what he appears, Shelby—a business consultant."

"What sort of business? I think you're holding out on me."

"O, just some business we were associated in with Mr. Jedburgh about a year ago."

"WELL, it's odd he should have put it just that way to this man de Saxe."

"But why—what's the matter with de Saxe?"

fect her from her self-exposure. Savages were clawing at them. The Samoans, bleeding themselves, swung up Wu and retreated. A figure leaped forward—Seto—swinging a long-handled tomahawk at Sprague. He warded it, struck back fiercely. The bloody handle turned a little in his sweating hands, but the keen edge crashed against the wizard's head, over his ear, and changed his painted face to a ghastly horror as he toppled down the steps, Gill's head, borne in his netted conjure bag, bumping after him. For a moment the tribesmen hung back, and Sprague made the porch floor.

The girl stood in the entrance, a half stick in her hand, a lighted match in the other. Then it went sputtering into the thick of the mob and detonated amid its own thunder and gaseous yellow flare. Reeking, smoke-clouded, pierced with splinters of the flooring, with the rent bodies of men. The porch rocked, sagged at one end. Glass shattered as Sprague and Opolu took the bombs the girl had fashioned and flung them at the broken, terror-stricken mob while Upiri tended Wu.

The fight was over. The tribe of Seto was decimated twice over, the wizard dead. Dirt was cratered under a litter of shrubbery as the dynamite roared. Bodies rolled into the ready-made graves. Tribesmen fled shrieking for the beach, the mountain. The canoe, piled with a rabble of frantic fugitives, labored unevenly down the lagoon.

Lyons, wild of eye and wan of face, came to the door and found his stepdaughter in Sprague's arms. Peril and strife had broken down the little barriers of restraint. Love claimed its own in the reaction of the fight. Love, linked with death and life, laughed at conventions, mocked at time, and frank youth stood triumphant.

"Eyah!" cried Tafulu. "Eyah, arii, that was a fight!"

Sprague looked up from the books he had been working over.

"Gill cheated wholesale," he said. "There are debts, but I can pay them. I have a few thousands at Tahiti."

"Why should you pay our debts?" asked Helen, and flushed at his look.

"Why shouldn't I? I came down here hoping to get into something like this. Why shouldn't I buy in here? Your stepfather is willing. Gill's gone. Amaru is tamed. Seto has gone into what Tafulu calls the black dark, ta po ele ele. Have you any objection to me as a partner?"

"I have got nothing to say about that," she answered.

"You have got everything to say about it. And you said it—without words—after the fight was over."

"I said nothing of the kind."

Sprague got up, limping a little where a spear had raked him, his ear patched and his cheek bandaged.

"I'm not much—to look at—as a lover," he said, advancing masterfully.

The girl eluded him, rose red of face. Despite his lameness he managed to catch her in the grove where they had sat that golden afternoon.

"Aren't you going to marry me?" he asked.

She shook her head.

"Why not?"

"You—haven't told me you loved me."

Tafulu, coming through the grove with Upiri, grabbed his fellow countryman by the arm and whirled him to look seaward.

"The sight of young lovers is a thing forbidden," he said in sonorous Samoan. "Soon, Upiri, you and I will be going once again to the mission. Now let us tell Wu to make a feast."

"He has only one good arm," Upiri objected.

"You speak foolishly. Wu will make the feast. As for his arm, happiness will soon mend it. Is not the joy of Missi Heleni our joy?"

"There is not much money in copra," Helen Brent said. "Labor is hard to get. I thought you told me—that afternoon—that you were going to look for pearls?"

"I was," Sprague answered. "That quest is ended, Pearl of Amaru."

"There you go again," Shelby said impatiently. "If you want me to spell it out, then here you are. First we notice the two curious facts about that airplane that pretended to be sky-writing. Then comes these two robberies, pulled off so easily as to start a lot of talk in the papers about there being some atmospheric phenomenon that made everybody sort of nutty just then. A little later we see this mysterious Mr. de Saxe dining with a wonderful beauty, and while we're dancing around you think you see the bandit who came out of the bank hovering, as one might say, about this same de Saxe, who the next evening we see hovering over that hill in a noiseless airplane with turkey buzzard wings like the one back home. It strikes me, John, that even if he hadn't the nerve to sit there and tell us blandly that all things were possible to science and that he had the answer to a lot of the riddles of the universe, the man you thought you saw in the restaurant makes the connecting link between out there and here."

Olivant was softly polishing his nails. "Don't you think that a little far fetched, Shelby?"

Cheerful Optimism Of Beautiful Baroness Styrcea

mother and Gertie Millar were the two best women he had ever known.

Everybody admits that Gertie Millar is a very charming and amiable woman. She is by no means as gay and reckless as most of the crowd with whom the duke has been amusing himself at Monte Carlo.

Recently she was married to the enormously wealthy Earl of Dudley, formerly governor general of Australia, and is leading a quiet and dignified life.

The first duchess remained married to the duke though parted from him for many years, but a year after the war she decided she could stand it no longer. She received her freedom and married another man.

The duke has some good qualities. He served with the British army on the retreat from Mons, when half the men fell. Later he commanded a battery of armored cars. He has led exploring expeditions into Africa.

He plays good polo and tennis, is big, raw-boned and sandy-haired and does not look particularly dissipated.

In fact, some persons go so far as to say that nobody could be as dissipated as he is alleged to be.

Dare Science Release The Atom's Power?

Science," "is the smallest particle of a chemical element. No one has ever seen an atom. Even the wonderful new microscope which has just been invented cannot possibly show us particles of matter which are a million times smaller than the breadth of a hair; for that is the size of atoms.

"We can weigh them and measure them, though they are invisible, and we know that all matter is composed of them. It is a new discovery that atoms are not indivisible. They consist of smaller particles called electrons. But the atoms exist all the same, and we may still say that they are the bricks of which the material universe is built.

"If we had some magical glass by means of which we could see into the structure of material things, we should not see the atoms put evenly together as bricks are in a wall.

"As a rule two or more atoms first come together to form a larger particle, which we call a molecule. Single atoms do not, as a rule, exist apart from other atoms; if a molecule is broken up the individual atoms seek to unite with other atoms of an entirely different kind or among themselves.

"For example, three atoms of oxygen form what we call ozone; two atoms of hydrogen uniting with one atom of oxygen form water. It is molecules, composed of millions and billions of little atoms, that form the mass of matter; a molecule, as it has been expressed, is a little building of which atoms are the bricks."

A CROSS WORD PUZZLE

What words are hiding in this cross word puzzle? Follow these instructions carefully and see how easily you will be able to find out. Remember that each white square means a letter of a word, those with the numbers indicating the first letters of the word, either horizontally (straight across) or vertically (straight down), or both. A black space means the end of a word. For instance, Number One Horizontal means "sugary." It has five letters. What can it be? Let us try "sweet." We can check it by referring to Number One Vertical which means "therefore." It has two letters. Does it also begin with an "s"? If it does, we are quite right in the solution of our first word. When you have guessed all the words, they will read from top to bottom as well as from left to right.

Here is a list of definitions for the words in this puzzle:

Horizontal.

1. Sugary.
4. Leave.
5. Conjunction.
6. Mixture of dirt and a liquid.
8. To polish.
10. Therefore.
12. Article.
13. Short letters.

Vertical.

1. Therefore.
2. Finish.
3. Toward.
4. Various forms of amusement.
6. A bird.
9. To strike.
11. Upon.
12. Because.

Elsewhere on this page you will find the answers to this puzzle, but do not look for them until you have worked for a long time to get the solution.

(Next week's cross word puzzle has a new and pretty design, but it isn't a bit harder to work than this one.)

WHAT "MAKES WHEELS GO ROUND"

The next time you go into a railroad station, go up to the forward part of the train and look at the large wheels of the engine—the driving wheels. No matter what type of locomotive you happen to see, the driving wheels will have great inserts of steel running about one-third or one-half the way around their circumferences.

These heavy steel inserts are not placed in the wheels to strengthen them—they never go more than half way around—but for another very sensible reason.

Keep Wheels Steady.

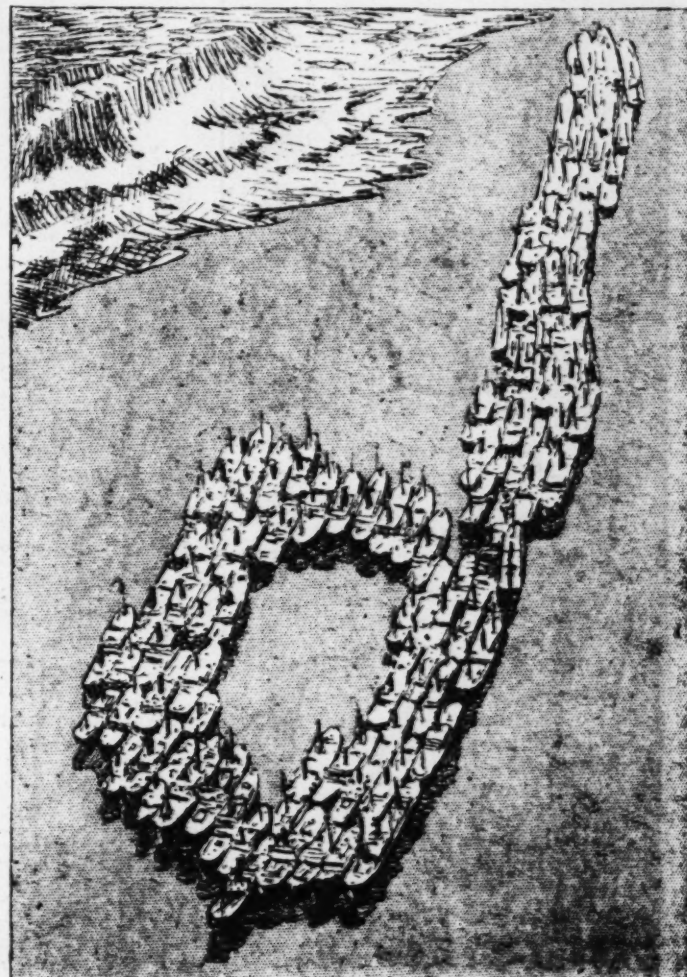

These large steel inserts are on the wheel so it will turn steadily and smoothly as the power is delivered to it. The extra weight which the inserts give to one portion of the wheel makes that wheel try to keep on going around at constant speed, even when power it not being delivered to it from the steam cylinders. If these weights were taken off engine wheels, traveling would be much jerkier and more uncomfortable than it is today.

On some of the large locomotives, these wheel weights amount to nearly 1,000 pounds in each driving wheel. The same large locomotives sometimes have a storage capacity of 18,000 gallons of water—and what monsters they are. Now 18,000 gallons of water is a good bit; so much, in fact, that if it were put in table glasses and the glasses were placed one on top of another, these glasses would form a column more than 22.7 miles high. Quite a bit of water?

The most usual way of filling the water tanks of an engine is to stop and put it in, but some engines and railroads are so equipped that the engines let down scoops which fit in a water trough in the center of the track and take the water on the run, so as to save a few minutes of time.

Like to Buy Boats at a Bargain?

Would you like to buy a ship? They're offered at bargain prices—$75,000 and up. There is a large supply on hand. You will have many to choose from.

Uncle Sam is the merchant that is conducting this sale—one of the biggest bargain sales of all history. The picture shown here with the object that looks like an inverted figure 6 is a bird's-eye view of 130 ships, held down by 200 anchors in the Hudson River five miles below the United States Military Academy at West Point. It is known as the Caldwell fleet, and is only one of several such fleets in which ships are being held until such time as they can be profitably sold.

Made During War.

All these ships were made during the war. They made hundreds of trips back and forth through the submarine zone. However, when the war ceased, there was no further need for so many vessels. Now they are on the bargain counter.

This Caldwell fleet is manned by a busy crew.

They work constantly, painting, painting, painting. Everything is painted so that nothing deteriorates with the weather. The decks and sides of the ships are painted red, gray, or black. Engines, machinery and all polished metal are painted over with an oily, tar-like solution, called "slush-black." The ships are kept clean and well-ordered so that, when a buyer comes along, he sees what he is to buy under the most favorable conditions.

Great Number Held.

It is almost a mile from one end of the fleet to the other. The little enclosure of water surrounded by ships is more than a pond—it is almost a lake. It takes over a day to visit all the ships.

Some real bargains are offered at this sale. Ships that once sold for $200 a ton can now be bought for $30. A good lake vessel as low as $75,000! Do you want one? Order now.

IN SNOPPYQUOP LAND WHERE NOTHING SEEMS QUEER

Here you are, fans—a cross word puzzle Snoppyquop. Like the can tied to the dog's tail, it was "bound to a cur," and now you are permitted to gaze pop-eyed at Snoppy Guzzle, the cross word puzzle. Sixteen years old and he's never said a cross word in his life! In this particular instance Guzzle's friend, Vertizontal, has unfolded himself in the middle and formed a table on which Gloomy Guz attempts to solve the latest combination of checkerboard, alphabet and multiplication table. While Vert, who is quite beside himself, does things by halves, Guzzle puts his whole soul—even his nose—into the work before him. "Now, what letter goes here?" he muses (no, not the way a kitty mews). All of a sudden—guess what happened! Well, you see, it's this way—Guzzle had bees in his belfry, and out his ear they came, and one flew right into his hand and sat down! "B—that's it!" Guzzle yelled. "You're stung," buzzed the bee, and flew away singing the following poem: "Guzzle had a swarm of bees, and They, to save their lives, Had to do his cross word puzzle— Guzzle had the hives!" EILEEN WEARS STEWART'S CLOTHES BUT FINDS AN UNEXPECTED CURE

"Where's my new blue tie with the gray stripes in it?" shouted Stewart from the top of the stairs. "Seems to me, my dear," his mother answered, "that when Eileen went out she was wearing a tie like that."

"This is the limit!" stormed Stewart. "I'm sick of the way Eileen is always copying me. She not only got a coat almost exactly like mine, which isn't so bad, since we're twins, but she wears my shirts and ties!"

Still grumbling, Stewart went off to school.

He was not one to stay angry long, and he quite forgot about the tie during the day. Besides, his mind was taken up with the fight between the B Street Boys and the Harrison Avenue Gang. The two crowds had had rival baseball and football teams, and while they had never had any actual fights, they were always at outs. Lately they had been having several squabbles, and it looked as though there might be serious trouble ahead.

Eileen waited for him after school and the two went home together. Several of the B Street Boys were loafing near, as they passed by, but they made no effort to start trouble.

After supper Eileen ran off to study with a friend a few blocks away. She had scarcely been gone when Stewart's mother called him to go on an errand to the drug store. Stewart wasn't cowardly, but his heart beat faster as he thought of the trip which would take him right across B street, and in the dark, for the street was very poorly lighted.

"Where's my cap?" he demanded as he started out.

His father chuckled. "Eileen has it on. I noticed that when she went out she seemed to be wearing a grey tam-o-shanter, which was very cute with her shingled hair. It must have been your cap, on backwards."

"Well—if I don't settle with her for that!" spluttered Stewart. "Now I have to go look up an old cap somewhere to wear." He found a cap and, still spluttering, started out.

"Goodness, what's the matter!" shouted his father, a few minutes later, for the front door opened suddenly and he heard loud sobbing.

In came Stewart and Eileen. Eileen's hair was mussed, her face and hands were dirty, and there was a scratch on one cheek. "I thought Stewart was the fighting member of the family," laughed her father, seeing that, in spite of her sobs, she wasn't hurt.

"Those awful—boys—thought I was Stewart," gulped Eileen, "and jumped on me—and threw me in the mud—before they found out—who I was."

Stewart helped her out of her coat sympathetically, but all the same there was a grin struggling in the corners of his mouth.

THE FUN BOX

Fast Time.

Waal, Zeke, what kind o' time did ya have in the city?" "Oh, that darn old daylight savin'."

She Was Safe.

Margaret: "Can a person be punished for something he hasn't done?"

Teacher: "Of course not." Margaret: "Well, I haven't done any geometry yet."

Peter Puzzle Says—

Behead a word meaning a narrow piece and get a journey; behead once more and get a tear.

Waking Him Up.

Teacher (entering classroom): "Order, please." Absent-minded student: "Egg sandwich."

Being Helpful.

Farmer: "You young rascal, what are you doing up in my apple tree?" Howard: "Please, sir, I'm frightening away the birds."

A Fish Story.

A lively young fisher named Fisher Fished for fish from the edge of a fissure; A fish with a grin— Pulled the fisherman in— Now they're fishing the fissure for Fisher.

That's Telling Him.

Dick: "Suppose you were in my shoes—what would you do?" Bob: "I'd shine them."

Much the Same.

First art student: "Say, have you any thumb tacks?" Second art student: "No, but will a finger nail do?"

Absent-Minded Syl

"Syl would forget his head if it wasn't fastened on," his mother sighed. "He's so dreadfully absent-minded. He just can't be made to realize that he must set his mind on things."

"I'll never forget," giggled his sister, "the time he invited a couple of boys home to dinner and then got it in his mind that they had invited him and wandered over to their house!"

"The trouble is that we laugh at him," scolded her mother. "He hasn't been made to realize what a serious thing it is to go wandering about in a trance the way he does."

"I think he's getting a bit better since he's been going to military school," defended his sister.

Syl's mother looked at the clock. "He ought to be home for his weekend visit by now. I suppose he missed the train, as usual."

"He'll be in on that late train, then. It's too bad, because he has so much farther to walk since we moved."

While they were talking, Syl was sitting dreamily in the train—he had, indeed, missed the earlier one—that was to bring him home. At last the train drew into the station and Syl stumbled out into the pitch black night.

He walked along with the slow, rolling stride by which he could always be recognized. Finally he turned up a walk and ran lightly up the steps of his house. He hoped his family had left the door unlocked so he wouldn't disturb them. But when he rattled the door handle, he couldn't get in.

Then he remembered vaguely that the window which opened on the porch was usually left unfastened, because of his well-known habit of locking himself out. He reached over, tugged at the window, and—

"Help! Burglars!" screamed a woman's voice. "Help!"

He had walked to the old house, from which they had moved two months before!

Syl is now learning, by practice, to "keep his mind on things."

Studying Stars

"You can't see the rabbit in the moon?" asked Hollis.

"Or the old man gathering sticks? Or the picture of the Gibson girl?"

"I never tried to."

"Step out in the garden where you can see better," coaxed Hollis, "and I'll show you how you can see those things. And I'll tell you the Japanese story about why the old man is gathering sticks."

"Nonsense."

"Or do you know anything about the stars? Not how far they are from the earth, but about the Great Bear and the queer stories people used to believe, long ago, about the stars."

"Not very much."

"It's a lot of fun to know about them. I studied about stars a long time. I can tell you how to find the North Star and a lot of other stars."

The old man who guarded the door at the main dormitory of the prep school was not a very sociable person. Nevertheless, he began to show a little interest in the moon and the stars. "I kinda thought when I was a boy I'd like to learn something like that," he admitted slowly. "Do you know which one is the dog star?"

Hollis beamed. "Of course I do. You can see it right here by the door. Just step a little into the open where the trees aren't in the way, and I can point it out to you."

"Can't I see it from here?"

"Not very well. There are too many trees. Just a step, though, and you can see it plain as anything."

"All right, hurry up. I didn't know, young fellow, you were so interested in stars."

He stepped out and gazed upwards the way Hollis pointed. "Whew!" said Hollis to himself. "What a lot of trouble to go to, so poor Perry, who is late again, could get in without being checked up."

And then aloud, "See that bright star there—"

Dumb Dora.

He: "I see where three persons were killed in a feud yesterday."

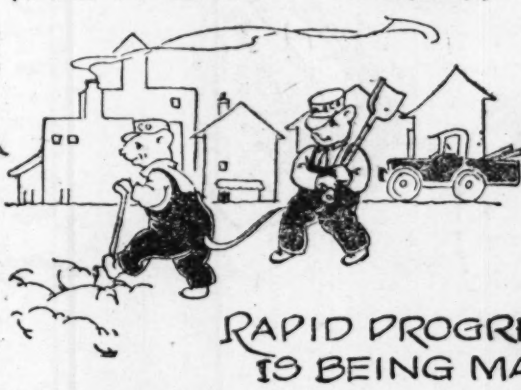

She: "Those little cheap cars are dangerous."

What Can You Make With Tangrams?

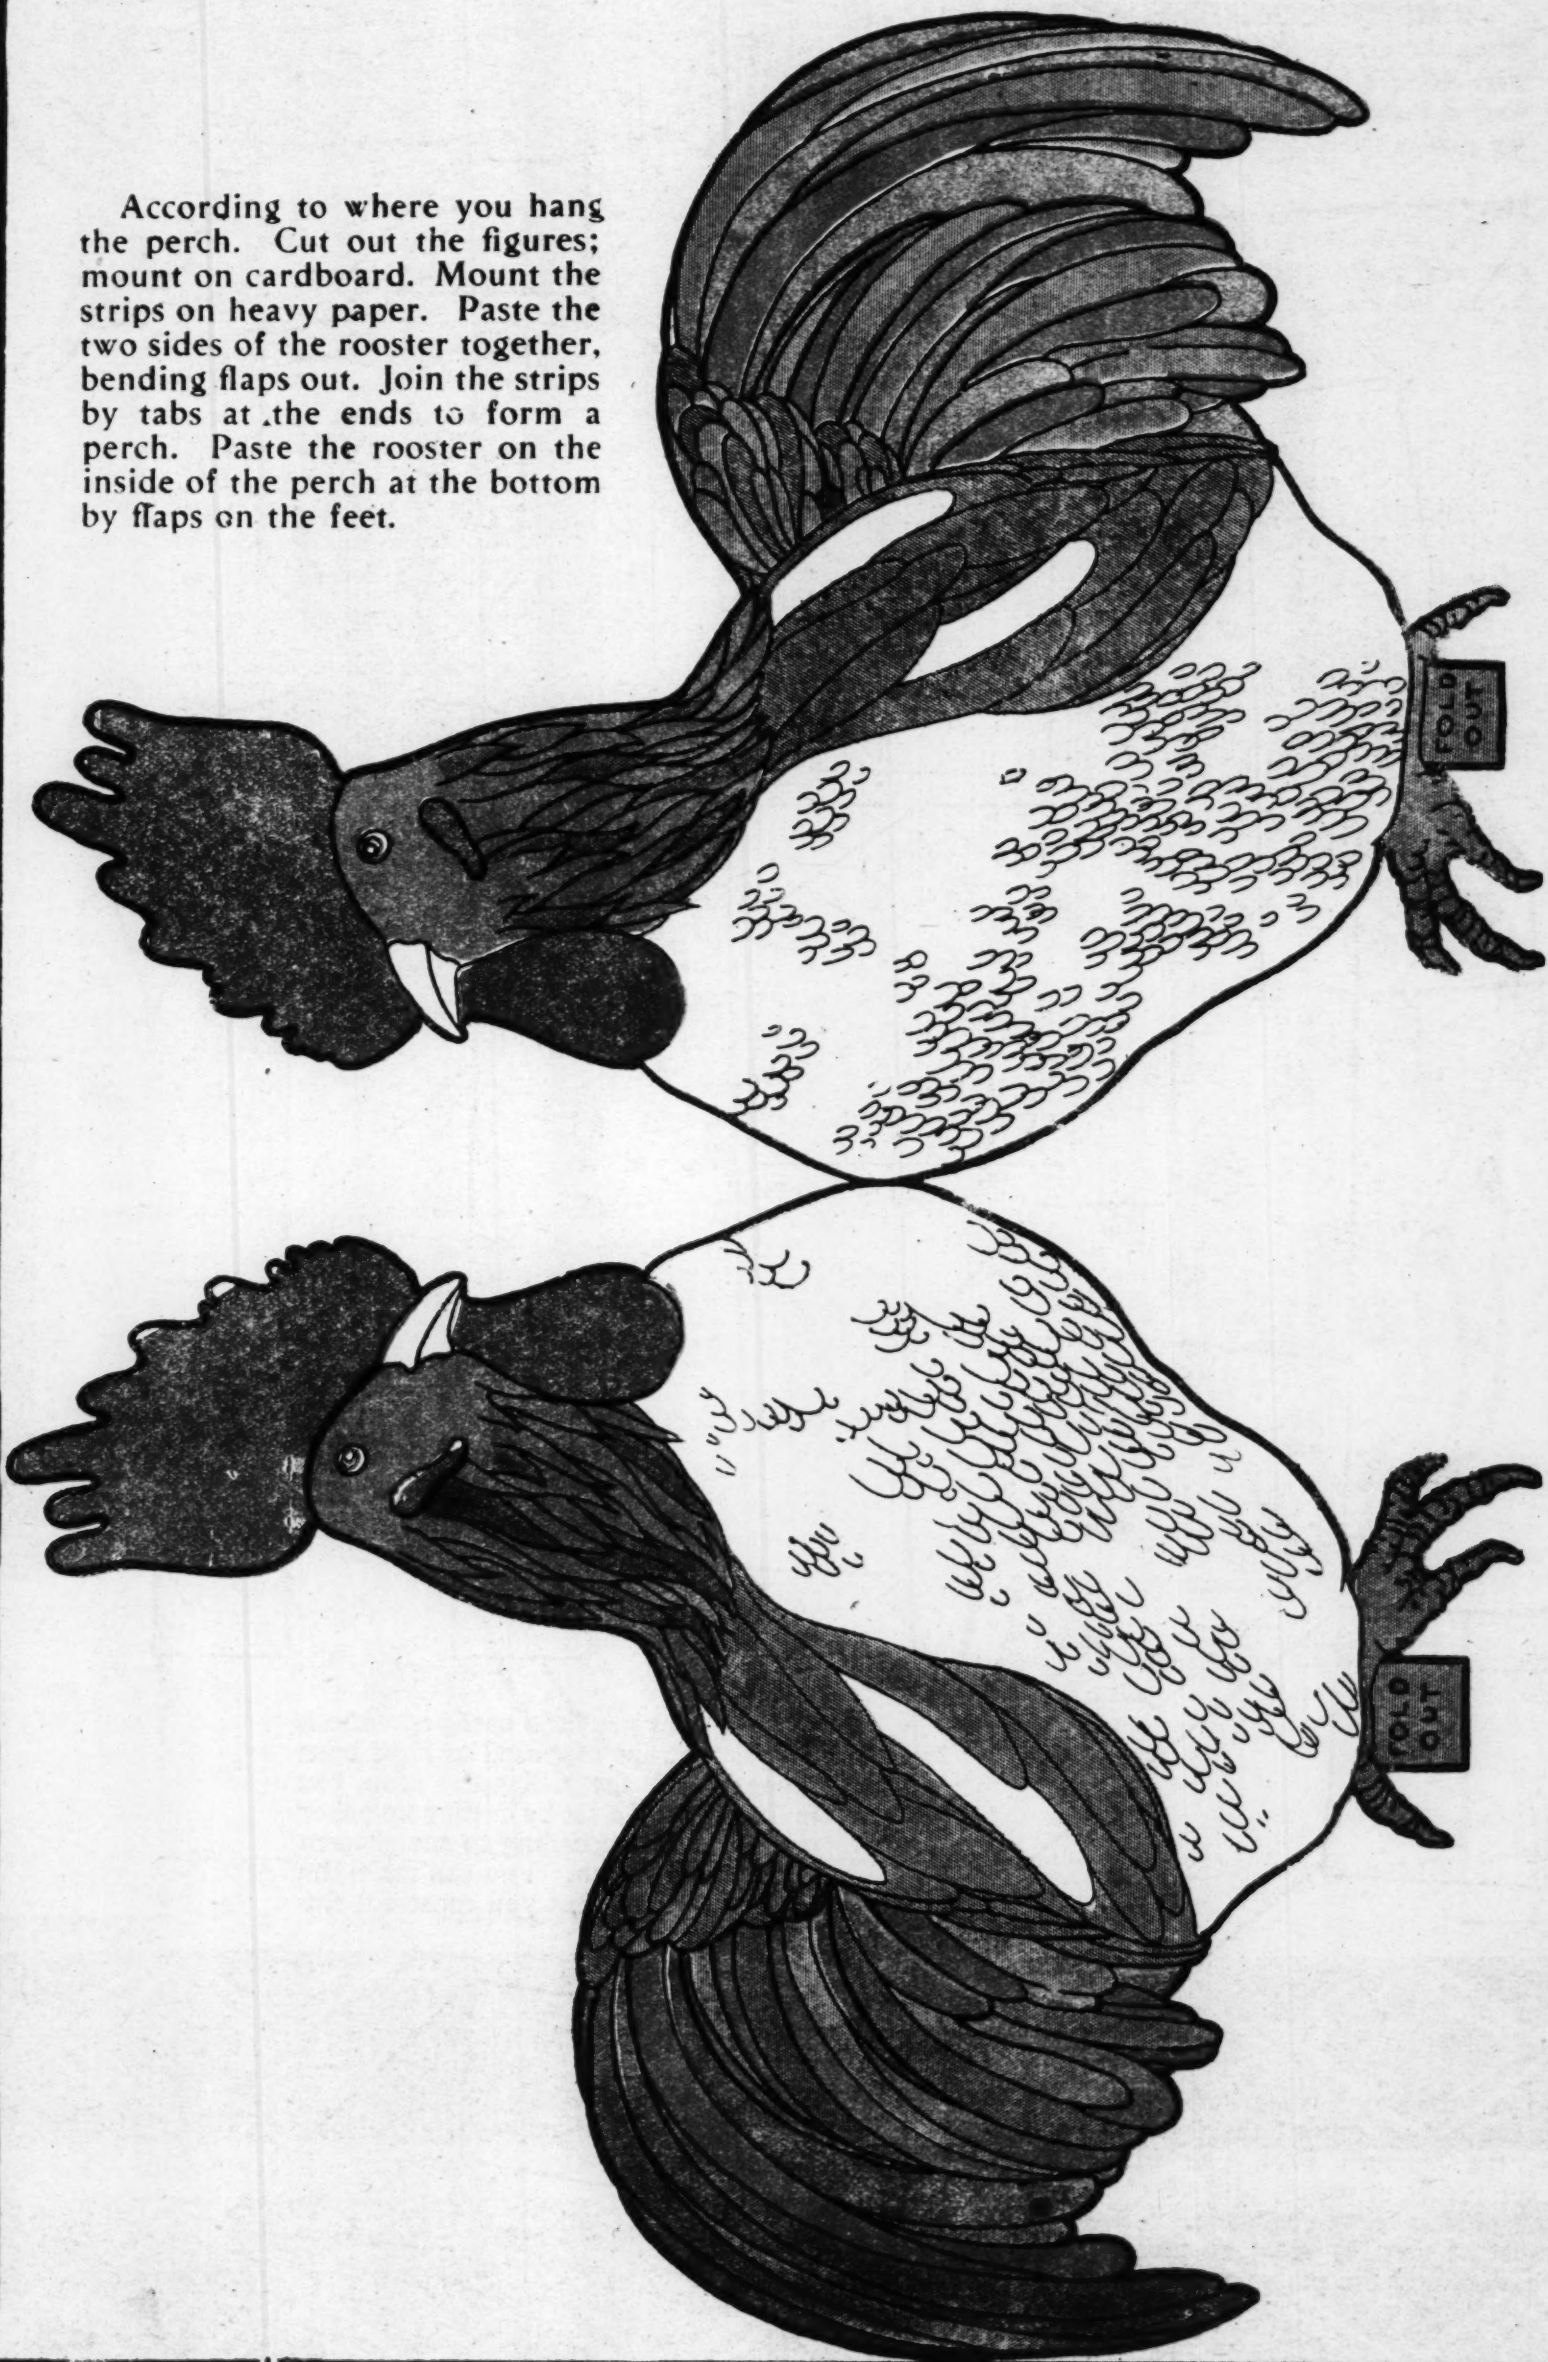

Tangrams are little cards of various shapes that are supposed to have been invented by the Chinese. You can make yourself a set by cutting up paper or cardboard according to the pattern in the small sketch. You can make the set big or little, but you must cut the paper in just the way it is marked here. Or you can cut up one of the figures and use the pieces. Then you will have seven pieces of paper, with which thousands of pictures can be made. All seven must be used at once; no more can be added, and the pieces may not overlap.

JUNG

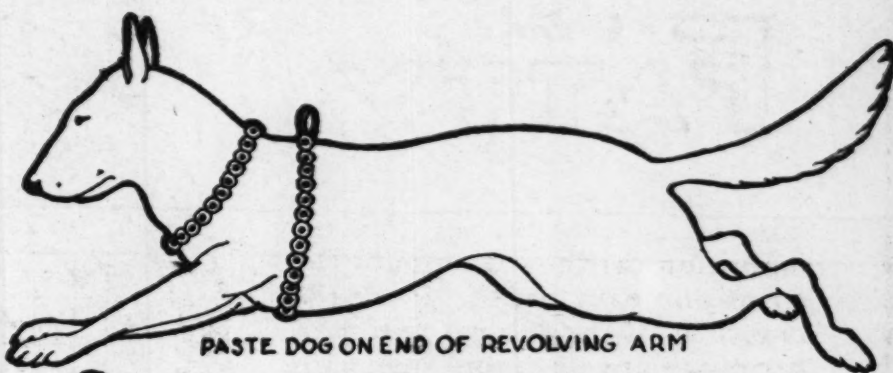

HE PERCHES HIGH OR LOW

According to where you hang the perch. Cut out the figures; mount on cardboard. Mount the strips on heavy paper. Paste the two sides of the rooster together, bending flaps out. Join the strips by tabs at the ends to form a perch. Paste the rooster on the inside of the perch at the bottom by flaps on the feet.

MAKE THE CLOWN'S DOG JUMP THROUGH THE HOOP
When the circus comes to town,
Who doesn't laugh to see a clown?
And if his dog jumps through a hoop
We give a cheer and laugh and whoop.

Here's a clown and here's a ring,
A dog, a stand and everything.
Cut and paste, and when it's done
You'll have a toy that's lots of fun.

Directions—Cut out the figures and paste on cardboard. Stand the two side pieces parallel. Fasten the end pieces to the side pieces with glue or paper clips so as to form an oblong box as shown in the small sketch. Put paste on the tab at the clown's feet and stick him to the back of the far side piece. Paste the braces for the ring on the outside of the box, in the center, one on each side. Cut slits in the braces on the dotted lines. Put the ends of the ring in the slits of the braces. Run a sharpened match through the center hole of the first side piece, then through the hole at the end of the revolving arm and then through the center hole of the second side piece. Fasten the dog to the upper end of the revolving arm with paste. To make the dog jump through the ring, twist the end of the match which comes through the center hole of either side piece.

BEAUTY Depends On Clean, Healthy Skin

Trusting to ordinary soaps and creams is preventing many a woman from looking her best. For they cannot always keep the skin healthy and clean.

Make this test!

If you wish to see how charming your skin can look, make this test. First, wash your face, neck and arms with ordinary soap—then go over the skin with a soft cloth that has been saturated with Crystal Bath Alcohol.

Instant Beauty That Lasts!

Notice the dust and grease that come off the cloth! When you realize the effect of these impurities left in the skin pores by ordinary soap and water you will understand why so many women have poor complexions. You will also realize why thousands are turning to Crystal Bath. It prevents the embarrassment of unpowdered moments by keeping the skin soft, healthy and clean.

CRYSTAL BATH IS DIFFERENT

Some alcohols are denatured with chemicals that are positively injurious to the skin. Prevents Enlarged Pores. Crystal Bath is different! It contains 95% grain alcohol and among other beautiful ingredients one best known to science for cleansing, refreshing and beautifying the skin.

Crystal Bath does more than beautify the skin. It neutralizes the odors of perspiration. You will want to use it on your whole body at least once a day.
